LETTER FROM THE Editor

Last season was one for the book in the National Football League. The record book, that is. Miami's Dan Marino, who rewrote the single-season marks for passing yards and touchdowns in 1984, added a new chapter for quarterbacks a year ago when he set career marks for pass attempts, completions, yards, and touchdowns. That relegated the former record-holder for those categories, Fran Tarkenton, to a footnote.

While Marino's place is secure for now, a number of quarterbacks made their mark last fall during an offensive assault on the record book. Four players threw for over 4,000 yards and 12 completed more than 60 percent of their throws. Brett Favre had an NFC-record 38 touchdown passes, earning Green Bay its first division title in 23 years and himself the league's Most Valuable Player award. Troy Aikman completed nearly 65 percent of his passes and had an NFC-low 1.6 interception percentage. But he raises his game to another level in the postseason, where his all-time passer rating is second only to Bart Starr's.

Aikman had help in leading Dallas to its third Super Bowl title in four years. Running mate Emmitt Smith had a league-high 1,773 yards and an NFL-record 25 touchdowns. The yardage put him more than halfway toward Walter Payton's place atop the game's rushing chart. Deion Sanders did his part as well. After earning a Super Bowl ring with San Francisco, Sanders defected to Dallas as a free agent and added to his jewelry collection. But it was another member of the Cowboys' secondary, Larry Brown, an unheralded 12th-round draft pick, who collected MVP honors in the Super Bowl after his second interception insured the victory.

Dallas has successfully dealt with losses sustained by free agency, salary cap restrictions, and injuries. Now it must withstand the self-inflicted wounds caused by off-the-field problems. And lurking in the wings in the AFC, waiting for the opportunity to topple Dallas, are the Dolphins' Jimmy Johnson, who directed the Cowboys to two Super Bowl championships, and the record-breaking Marino. Mark your calendars: October 27—Dallas at Miami!

FOOTBALL'S BEST

Minneapolis Star Tribune

Emmitt Smith has scampered across that threshold where people stop writing odes and feature stories and start writing professional obituaries. Running backs are supposed to sputter, gasp, and limp when they reach the sort of career numbers Smith has achieved. The 5-9, 209-pound Florida alum has crammed his 2,007 carries (within 352 of Jim Brown's nine-year total) and 8,956 yards (more than halfway to the 16,726 that Walter Payton amassed over 13 seasons) into six years.

The Cowboys went 12-4 and won their third Super Bowl of the '90s with 29 different players and a different head coach from their championship team three years earlier. Smith was remarkable. He regained the rushing title from Barry Sanders by a comfy 273 yards, and his 1,773 yards and 377 carries were career highs. He had a record 25 touchdowns to move into fifth place all-time, only 14 behind Payton's rushing total of 110. He has scored 38 touchdowns in his last 23 games and has kept the football from each one, suggesting an awfully large den or basement. His value to the Cowboys is unquestioned. They are 62-8 when he carries at least 20 times, 43-5 when he gets 100 yards. When he doesn't play at all, they are 0-4.

Smith makes it sound simple: "All I'm looking for is an open space and to see if I can get there."

Pittsburgh's 3-4 defense stymied Smith for just 49 yards in Super Bowl XXX. But think back to the NFC title game, when he rushed 35 times for 150 yards in a 38-27 victory over Green Bay. He scored

"All I'm looking for is an open space and to see if I can get there."

the Cowboys' final three touchdowns and, when they were backed up to their 1-yard line in the second quarter, broke free for 25 yards to start a 99-yard drive that he finished with a 1-yard plunge.

How much longer can Smith, 27, run? He has already beaten the odds for running backs of average workloads. An arc of four seasons, start to finish, is considered the norm. He had trouble with his hamstrings in 1994, when he "slumped" to 1,484 yards. Smith's protection, the Dallas offensive line, is still dominant but aging, and the Cowboys spent their 1995 first-round pick on Alabama's Sherman Williams to have a ready replacement for Smith.

With only this season left on a four-year, $13.6 million package, Smith heard Cowboys owner Jerry Jones talk about a deal that would reflect Smith's worth to the team and keep him in silver-and-white for life. Still, Smith had to hold out for two games to get his last contract. He hasn't doused speculation that he might like to play again for Jimmy Johnson, now in Miami. Meanwhile, Jones has tried to use guilt, alluding to teammates that will be waived to make room for Smith's salary under the cap.

"I don't know what the future holds," said Smith, "but I'm pretty pleased with where I've been." □

Imagine Steve Young without Jerry Rice or Troy Aikman without Michael Irvin. Now try to imagine those quarterbacks having the best individual seasons of their careers while leading their teams deeper into the postseason than in any of the past 28 years.

That's exactly what Green Bay's Brett Favre did. Without Sterling Sharpe (who caught 314 passes in his final three seasons and 18 of Favre's 33 touchdown passes in 1994), Favre threw for 4,413 yards with an NFC-record 38 TDs and only 13 interceptions. The Packers went 11-5, won their first NFC Central title in 23 years, beat the defending Super Bowl champion San Francisco 49ers in the playoffs, and reached the NFC championship game for the first time since 1967.

Deservedly, Favre, who threw 33 touchdowns with just 3 interceptions in the Packers' 11 victories, was chosen as the NFL's MVP. He also became Green Bay's first All-Pro quarterback since Bart Starr.

No one was more confident than Favre that the Packers could survive without Sharpe (whose career ended with a neck injury). Favre wasn't obliged to serve one premier receiver. Twelve players caught passes and a league-high nine of them scored. Robert Brooks led with 102 receptions for 1,497 yards and 13 touchdowns, but five others caught at least 30 balls and three TDs.

It has been four years since Atlanta, which had drafted Favre out of Southern Mississippi in 1991, shipped the native of Kiln, MS, north. It has been three years since Favre tossed 19 touchdowns and an unnerving 24 interceptions. He turned those numbers around in 1994, with 33 TDs and 14 interceptions (23-8 in the last nine games), and came of age last season.

Perhaps Favre's most impressive stat is his 14-0 record when the temperature at kickoff is 35 degrees or below. That endears him to the Packers' faithful, for whom Favre is willing to play his entire career if the parties can work out a new deal. At 26, his best seemingly is yet to come. His all-time quarterback rating (86.8) ranks fourth in NFL history, behind Young (96.1), Joe Montana (92.3), and Dan Marino (88.4), but Favre is more proud of his 61 consecutive starts and 37-24 record in those games.

"What people will care about is how many wins I have," Favre said.

"Things like consecutive starts mean something to me. I want people to look back and say,

'He was a winner and he was fun as hell to watch.'"

Fun to watch? Favre is worth the price of admission. Unlike Aikman, who wisely plants himself in the pocket behind Dallas's impenetrable offensive line, Favre wheels and deals from anywhere behind the line of scrimmage.

Tough and fearless, he endured 33 sacks last season.

"I'm willing to do whatever it takes to win," Favre said. "I love blocking and I love throwing the bomb. If I had been 280 pounds, I could have been a nose tackle. I have that mentality, and I think that's great for a quarterback. The ability to improvise is the most important thing: Making something happen when nothing is there."

BRETT FAVRE

"I want people to look back and say, 'He was a winner and he was fun to watch.'"

About the only thing that does seem to stymie him is Texas Stadium. Green Bay's 38-27 loss to Dallas in the NFC title game weighs heavily on Favre, thanks to Larry Brown's fourth-quarter interception that doused the Packers' hopes. Time ran out that day with Favre getting sacked on three consecutive plays. He will be back, though. Count on it. □

"I'm not the fastest in the world, but I'm one of the quickest guys off the ball."

Bryce Paup is everything the Green Bay Packers and their fans like and stand for: A hard worker, a humble man of action, and a ferocious quarterback sacker. He even loves snowmobiling, for crying out loud. Paup grew up in Iowa, so building a home and making a life in the hinterlands of the NFL's smallest market would have come easily. He was ready to put down roots.

Except the Packers didn't want him. At least not at his price. So they let the 6-5, 247-pound Pro Bowl linebacker walk. The Packers had a good year, winning the NFC Central and coming within a game of the Super Bowl. Still, it took months before Green Bay GM Ron Wolf acknowledged that he had made a "miscalculation" in not resigning Paup.

The Buffalo Bills signed Paup ($7.6 million over three years) after finishing 7-9 in 1994 with a defense that had managed only 25 sacks and ranked 17th. Paup, nervous about his acceptance by teammates and fans, gave them a glimpse of the season to come in the second exhibition game. He shoved aside Steelers fullback Steve Avery and sacked Neil O'Donnell, causing a fumble. The Bills amassed 49 sacks (including a league-high 17.5 by Paup), rebounded to 11-5, and won the AFC East for the sixth time in eight seasons. Paup earned the NFL's Defensive Player of the Year award. His No. 95 jersey is a big seller at the souvenir stands.

Not bad for a guy who grew up in Scranton, Iowa, a town of about 750 people 70 miles northwest of Des Moines. Paup learned his work habits on the family farm, where he converted an old chicken house into a makeshift gym. He learned some of his football habits from his older brothers, who spared him no punishment in pick-up games.

When it was time for college, Paup (pronounced "Pop") got rejected by both Iowa and Iowa State. Only after his girlfriend and future wife, Denise, then a freshman at Northern Iowa, told one of the Panthers' assistant coaches about Paup did he get a chance there. They watched some grainy video of Paup in action, saw a man among boys, and quickly offered him a scholarship.

A sixth-round pick in 1990, Paup spent most of his rookie season on Green Bay's IR or special teams. In 1991, he had 7.5 sacks, including 4.5 in one game against Tampa Bay. He had 6.5 sacks in 1992, 11 in 1993, and 7.5 in 1994, yet started all 16 games for the Packers only once. In a way, Paup, 28, was a victim of his own approach. He works so hard, and relies so much on fundamentals, that people typecast him as an over-achiever whose skills don't quite match his sweat.

"I'm not the fastest in the world, but I'll challenge anybody on reaction time," said Paup, whose crewcut makes him look like a latter-day Dick Butkus. "I'm one of the quickest guys off the ball, and there's no substitute for that."

Packers defensive coordinator Fritz Shurmur called Paup "as good a team guy as I've ever been around in 40 years of coaching." Green Bay bounced Paup all over the defense. Inside, outside, defensive end. Pass rush, pass coverage, run defense. The Bills stuck him in the lineup as a pass rusher, then dared offensive lines to stop both him and Bruce Smith. It was much like his best days in Green Bay, where Reggie White drew the double-teams; Smith either attracted the blockers or broke loose thanks to Paup's pressure.

Alas, with Smith too ill to play in the Bills' AFC playoff game against Pittsburgh, Paup got bottled up by the Steelers in a 40-21 defeat. The double- and triple-teams he saw that day said as much about Paup's reputation as it did about Smith's absence.

"It's harder to stay at a consistent level when they decide that you're good," Paup said.

Michael Yelman

Greg Lloyd heard something that San Diego linebacker Junior Seau once said about mediocrity, and he pounced on it as if it were a quarterback in the open field. "Seau compared [life] to a chessboard," the Steelers' All-Pro said. "If you're mediocre, you're a pawn. There's a bunch of those on the board. I want to be the damn king."

Funny thing is, it's other guys who get crowned. In nine NFL seasons, Lloyd is more tyrant than benevolent ruler, and one of the league's most punishing competitors. Former coach Jerry Glanville labeled Lloyd "the meanest man in football." At the Super Bowl, Dallas's Charles Haley compared Lloyd to himself. "We play on the edge of being wrong and right," Haley said.

Lloyd, who has a black belt in tae kwon do, brings a decidedly sinister slant to his job as a pass-rushing linebacker. "You have to play this game like someone just robbed you and is running down the street with your TV on his back." Lloyd, 31, treats quarterbacks like coters. After a hit on the Raiders' Vince Evans in 1994, when he stripped the ball and nearly Evans's hand from his arm, Lloyd said, "Nah, I wasn't trying to break his wrist, but if it breaks, that's part of the game."

He was fined $12,000 last summer for knocking out Green Bay's Brett Favre in a preseason game with his helmet. He allegedly threatened to knock Miami's Dan Marino "into next week." When Hall of Famer Joe Namath blasted him on the air, Lloyd countered, "Who is Joe Namath? If he played in the league today, I'd probably just go hit him late and see what he did." And last January, Lloyd didn't hide his eagerness to get a good shot at Dallas's Troy Aikman.

"If you get a chance to hit the quarterback, you try to put him out of the game," he said. "No offense, but that's part of it. That's the risk you take for making $7 million a year."

Lately, Lloyd has been more of a leader than a lunatic. He was nominated for the 1994 Byron (Whizzer) White Humanitarian Award and was named the 1994 Pittsburgh YMCA Man of the Year. But the scars are there. Lloyd never knew his father. When he was 2 years old, his mother dropped him and four siblings off at an aunt's house. She saw him again about seven years later.

"The complete family, the mom and dad, the milk and cookies? No. I got a taste of reality real fast," Lloyd said. Rage and resentment soon became his partners on the field. "I'd be playing against these kids, and they'd have their parents up in the stands rooting and hollering for them," Lloyd said. "I'd say to myself, 'I'm going to break your Johnny's nose.'"

After attending Division II Fort Valley State, Lloyd was drafted in the sixth round in 1987, the 30th linebacker picked. The banners at Three Rivers Stadium now warn, "Avoid Lloyd!" For an opposing coach, the only thing more unsettling than seeing Lloyd bearing down on his quarterback is losing track of him completely. "I want to hear the quarterback saying, 'Check 95. Where's 95?'" Lloyd said.

"Greg Lloyd is not a mean man. I think he is a warrior," Steelers defensive coordinator Dick LeBeau said. "He's a family man, involved in community projects. He does a tremendous job with underprivileged youth. He is very, very focused on football on Sunday afternoon. I guess that's the side the public sees."

It's also the blind side that so many quarterbacks don't

"I want to hear the quarterback saying, 'Where's 95?'"

No one would have blamed Aeneas Williams had he left. The most coveted defensive back on the free-agent market last winter, Williams had teams poised to shovel money at him. For five seasons, he had been the property of the Arizona Cardinals, a franchise that last made the playoffs when...what, Williams was in the eighth grade? The Cardinals haven't WON a playoff game since Truman was in the White House. For Williams, finally, it was a chance to go elsewhere. To play for a winning team and to be rewarded financially beyond his dreams.

Instead, Williams re-signed with Arizona. Short of the Stockholm Syndrome—a psychological phenomenon in which hostages ultimately identify with their captors (a fair analogy to the Cardinals) it was almost inexplicable that Williams would willingly walk back into the gulag. Was 8 in 1994, plummeted to 4-12, including a 1-7 mark in the second half. They were held without a touchdown in five games and had an offense ranked 24th that coughed up 43 turnovers. The defense swooned from third to 26th. Maybe only someone like Williams, who attends a twice-weekly Bible study group during the season at 5:45 a.m., could have kept the faith in the Cardinals.

AENEAS WILLIAMS

Williams has heard good things from Indianapolis players about new coach Vince Tobin, who as defensive coordinator was instrumental in turning the Colts from 4-12 doormats in 1993 to AFC contenders in 1995. "The biggest thing was he believes in putting people around him who have character," Williams said. "That's one of the foundations in building a successful team."

Over the past two seasons, the 5-9, 190-pound Williams has intercepted 15 passes. He finished fourth on the team in scoring a year ago, thanks to two interceptions for touchdowns and a 75-yard return of a blocked field goal. But don't confuse him with Deion Sanders, the only cornerback with a bigger contract. Williams can tackle.

"I don't think of myself as being born with gifted ability like Deion," Williams said. "I'm always thinking there is something else I can do."

The man works at his craft, soliciting advice from veteran opponents and utilizing every video clip he can find. When ESPN taped a segment on cornerbacks, it chose Williams for a step-by-step demonstration. That's how fundamentally sound he is.

Williams had passed on an academic scholarship from Dartmouth to follow his brother, Achilles, to Southern University. He did not play football until his junior year, and went from a walk-on to the nation's interception leader. A third-round pick in 1991, he became the NFC Defensive Rookie of the Year. His value is greater, though, than the passes he picks off or bats away. In past years, the Cardinals had allowed talent such as Ken Harvey,

Tim McDonald, and Jay Novacek to leave. Losing Williams, already established and respected in the community, would have been a bigger blow. Keeping him—along with defensive lineman Eric Swann—won't propel the Cardinals into the Super Bowl. But for credibility with the fans, few teams needed Williams more than Arizona.

"There are certain guys you want to keep happy," Swann said. "If you're good to them, they'll be good to you." □ it the weather? The Phoenix culture? The fajitas? Was it, the cynics wondered, simply a sellout for $17 million over five years (with a $6 million bonus)?

"It's easy to jump off the boat when it looks like everything is sinking," said Williams.

Huh? Loyalty? To the NFL's version of the Los Angeles Clippers? Williams obviously isn't just a rare talent at cornerback, he's a rare fellow. The Cardinals, a promising 8-

SPORTS

For most of his first four NFL seasons, it wasn't easy being Herman Moore. It wasn't easy being a 6-4, 210-pound topnotch wide receiver on the Detroit Lions. Not with Barry Sanders as the first and often last offensive options. Not with a quartet of quarterbacks spinning like a revolving door through that position. Not with a gimmicky attack that could relegate him to the role of decoy or blocker for two or three quarters at a time. In Moore's heart, he knew he could challenge the top NFC receivers. But his brilliance stayed locked away for most of those four seasons.

HERMAN MOORE

After the Lions started 0-3 a year ago, the players convinced the coaches to keep things simple. "From game to game, we had so many multiple sets that it was confusing for a lot of people," Moore said. "It seemed like we were trying so many different things, we could never get comfortable with one set."

The coaches obliged and Moore didn't just get comfortable, he luxuriated, finishing with an NFL-record 123 catches. His 1,686 receiving yards ranked fourth all-time and he scored 14 touchdowns. Moore and Brett Perriman became the only teammates in NFL history to catch at least 100 passes each in the same season. Their 231 receptions broke the record set a year earlier by Minnesota's Carter and Jake Reed, and their 3,174 yards broke the record of 2,921 set in 1961 by Houston's Bill Groman and Charley Hennigan.

Detroit won its final seven games to reach the playoffs, and was the first team ever to have a 1,500-yard receiver, a 4,000-yard passer (Scott Mitchell), and a 1,500-yard rusher (Sanders). Moore, 26, should expect to see the ball throughout his career in Detroit. He has four years left on a $13.75 million contract.

Things were not always so promising. Born in Danville, VA, Moore stayed home to play at the University of Virginia, where he found himself on the scout team, an experience he later described as the most humbling of his life. He worked his way off it and in his senior year set school records with 54 catches for 1,190 yards and 13 TDs.

The Lions picked Moore 10th in the first round in 1995, but he caught just 11 passes that season. His production jumped to 51 in 1992 and 61 in '93. In 1994—benefiting from a rigorous workout program implemented by his wife, Angela, a former Virginia track star—Moore caught 72 passes for 1,173 yards and 11 TDs. Last season, he shattered the club record for receptions in the 10th game. He has an active streak of at least one catch in 60 consecutive games. He made the Pro Bowl on his own (not, as in 1994, as Rice's replacement).

What got him there? Size, the leaping ability of an NBA forward, and hands of Velcro. "I've never seen anybody latch onto a ball the way he does," said Detroit receivers coach Charlie Sanders. Moore can fend off a sticky defender and pluck an alley-oop toss. Former Lions quarterback Dave Krieg said, "One of the keys to Moore's success is he can jump off either foot and he wants the ball, just like all the great receivers."

Moore's head is the proper size, too. He once apologized for spiking the ball ferociously at an opponent's feet, even though the defensive back had yakked at him all day. He tried to become more of a team leader last season, and he sponsors an affordable football camp for inner-city youngsters each summer.

Still, his lack of cockiness should not be mistaken for any missing confidence. "I really pride myself on going out and making the tough catches look easy," Moore said. "Anything I touch, I feel I should catch. By keeping that mentality, I think I set myself up for success." □

by RICK GOSSELIN DALLAS MORNING NEWS

● The Miami Dolphins' Dan Marino raised the bar for National Football League quarterbacks to new heights in 1995 when he set career records for pass completions (3,913), attempts (6,531), yards (48,841), and touchdowns (352), wresting all four marks away from Hall of Famer Fran Tarkenton. Marino already holds the single-season records for passing yards (5,084) and touchdowns (48), which he set in 1984. All six of his records appear off in the distance—for now.

But with a record four quarterbacks (Green Bay's Brett Favre, Detroit's Scott Mitchell, Minnesota's Warren Moon, and Atlanta's Jeff George) throwing for 4,000 yards a year ago and 12 completing more than 60 percent of their passes, a posse has been assembled. Marino and his records are now in their cross hairs.

For the Record

Defenses became overmatched sparring partners last season as the NFL set standards for yardage and points. Passing yards exceeded the 100,000-mark in a season for the first time in history and points topped the 10,000-mark for the first time as well. Individually, Emmitt Smith scored an NFL record 25 touchdowns for the Dallas Cowboys. Herman Moore caught a record 123 passes for the Detroit Lions, Jerry Rice amassed a record 1,848 receiving yards for the San Francisco 49ers, and Favre passed for an NFC record 38 touchdowns for the Packers.

Nine receivers posted 100-catch efforts in 1995, almost equaling the combined number of individual 100-catch seasons

(10) in the first 75 years of the NFL. Twenty-three receivers had 1,000-yard seasons, another league record. Quarterbacks as a group completed 58 percent of their passes. Ten years ago, they were completing 54 percent, 20 years ago, 52 percent.

"We made it so easy to throw that more people are throwing," said Tony Dungy, a former defensive coordinator of the Minnesota Vikings and now the head coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. "The more you throw, the more yards you pile up, the more you're going to score. You aren't necessarily going to win...but you're going to make yards and score points. So more teams are throwing 61, 62, 63 percent of the time."

Passing the Word

Who can blame them? Over the years, the NFL has changed the rules to encourage passing. Teams would be crazy not to put the ball in the air. They are no longer playing the game that Dick "Night Train" Lane remembers.

Lane might have trouble surviving in today's NFL. Ability wouldn't be his problem. Lane was one of four cornerbacks selected to the NFL's 75th anniversary team in 1995. Few players in the game's history patrolled the secondary with his prowess and flair. He would have been an oversized cornerback in any era, packing 210 pounds onto his 6-2 Hall of Fame frame. His size intimidated receivers and his hands intimidated quarterbacks. He intercepted 68 passes in his 14-year career from 1952-65.

Lane's problem would be his style. He would not be allowed to play the same game in the 1990s that he played in the 1950s.

Lane would be a physical corner playing what has evolved into a finesse game.

"The rules would have slapped me down," mused Lane, trying to envision himself in today's game. "I probably would have gotten 1,000 yards in penalties because I just don't believe in letting a receiver run off that line scot-free."

But receivers are allowed to run free. Blockers are allowed to clutch and grab. Quarterbacks are allowed to ground the ball to avoid a hit. The game has changed dramatically since the 1960s, when defense did indeed win championships. Rule changes have chipped away at that defensive super-ority culminated by an unprecedented offensive explosion in 1995. That came as no surprise to those on the inside.

"All the rules have been changed to make it an offensive show," said Ray Rhodes, a former defensive coordinator of the San Francisco 49ers and now the head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles. "Protecting the quarterback. Line play. Moving the kickoff back to the 30—every rule has been established for the offensive team to be more explosive and score more points. You entertain with offense and win with defense. But right now the defenses are victims. They're just strapped."

On the Defensive

When the AFL and NFL merged in 1970, defenses were dominant. Games were controlled by Minnesota's Purple People Eaters, Miami's No Names, the Dallas Doomsday, and finally Pittsburgh's Steel Curtain. In 1971 there was only one 1,000-yard receiver in the 26-team league: Otis Taylor of the Kansas City Chiefs. He was huge by wide-receiver standards for his day at 6'2", 215, and he needed every bit of that bulk to survive the weekly pummeling he took from cornerbacks.

All the guys played the bump-and-run then," Taylor said. "They attacked the receiver as he left the line. There wasn't a five-yard rule. Truth be known, there weren't any rules. It was pretty physical out there."

But in 1974, the NFL began a push to promote offense. The league implemented a one-chuck rule after three yards. No longer could cornerbacks mug receivers up and down the field. In 1977, the league tightened up coverage even further, limiting defenders to just one bump anywhere on the field. The NFL also took measures to slow down the pass rush by outlawing the head slap by defenders.

In 1978, the NFL altered another rule and allowed blockers to extend their arms and open their hands when engaging pass rushers. The league also cracked down on cornerbacks again, implementing the five-yard rule. That restricted their one bump on receivers to within five yards of the line of scrimmage. In 1984, a new rule allowed offensive linemen to run-block with their arms extended. By 1987 the rule was enhanced to allow offensive players to block with extended arms anywhere on the field.

In 1988, the NFL tinkered with the pass-interference rule, preventing defenders from cutting off receivers and impeding their progress to the ball. In 1993, intentional grounding was legalized when a quarterback was flushed from the pocket. In 1994 the league allowed offensive tackles to take a deeper set on passing downs. That extra foot in the backfield helped slow down the outside speed rushers, giving quarterbacks more time to throw to receivers who were running untouched through the secondary.

That's Entertainment

The bottom line? Offense sells. And right now the NFL is selling. For the seventh consecutive year, the league set an attendance record. More than 19 million fans passed through the turnstiles on their way to the offensive circus. Television ratings also are soaring. The largest TV audience in history, 138.5 million, watched the Cowboys and Pittsburgh Steelers in Super Bowl XXX. So the game's popularity and offensive football barrel along on parallel tracks toward the same destination—prosperity. The NFL is more than a sport. It is entertainment.

I understand the business of football," Washington's Pro Bowl cornerback Darrell Green said. "I'm like everyone else—I'd rather see Michael Jordan slam dunk than steal it. He made the all-offense and all-defense teams in the NBA. But really, which one do you want to see for your dollar? Do you want to see him score 40 or do you want to see [Dennis] Rodman get 15 rebounds? What Rodman does is great. But given a choice, I'd rather see Michael Jordan make a double-tomahawk, one-handed dunk from the free throw line."

"Pro sports is all about what sells tickets. You've got to have points and scoring. As a player, I understand the importance of the offense being successful for the business of our game."

Cutting Corners

But the price of success has handcuffed the defense, especially cornerbacks. As the game became less physical on the flank, NFL defenses went to the smaller corners. If you couldn't hit the receivers any more, then you'd better be able to run with them. So undersized speed merchants like Green, Terry McDaniel, Frank Minnifield, and Donnell Woolford became the state-of-the-art Pro Bowl cornerbacks in the 1980s and early '90s.

But a reverse trend has developed on offense. As the cornerbacks grew smaller the receivers grew bigger. The New York Jets drafted Al Toon (6-4) and the 49ers Jerry Rice (6-2) in 1985. Mike Sherrard came along in 1986. Carter in '87, and Irvin in '88. All were in the 6-2 range. Then came Herman Moore, Alvin Harper, and Jake Reed in 1991. All were 6-3. The 49ers drafted J.J. Stokes (6-4) in 1995.

Now every team has a big receiver, some even two and three of them. When the Cowboys overtook the Redskins for division conference, and league superiority in 1992 they capitalized on size mismatches on the flank with two wideouts over 6-2 (Irvin and Harper) against a pair of 5-8 corners (Green and Martin Mayhew).

NFL receivers are using that growth spurt to their advantage. There is more pushing and shoving going on by offensive players than ever before. And why not? If there is enough contact to draw a penalty flag, 80 percent of the time it goes against the defense. Last season there were 326 pass interference calls, with only 62 going against the offense. And defensive pass interference remains the most costly infraction in the book, with the penalty assessed at the spot of the foul. So 20-, 30-, and 40-yard penalties are not uncommon. Because of that, defensive players almost have to shy away from downfield contact. But not offensive players. That makes Lane wince.

"In the Super Bowl, Michael Irvin was pushing and holding people, using his hands," Lane said. "We were taught to break their hands if they put them on you. He'd have to sit out a couple weeks because he'd end up with a broken hand or elbow. That would keep his hands off you."

Zone Defense

But the rules won't let a cornerback chuck a wideout downfield much less break his hands. That has led to a philosophical change by defensive coaches: Man-to-man coverage—the backbone of defenses in the 1960s, when Lane, Herb Adderley, and Willie Brown were mounting Hall of Fame portfolios—is now in dry dock.

"In the early days, it was Roy Green and Darrell Green one-on-one," Darrell Green said. "Mike Quick and Darrell Green one-on-one. Tony Hill and Darrell Green. Jerry Rice. Mark Duper. Man-on-man. One-on-one. You-against-me. But you can't get those one-on-one battles any more. The offenses won't give them to you. The rules have made us become a zone game."

Cornerbacks have been asked to sit back in zones and keep the play in front of them. At all costs, don't give up the big play. So more and more offenses are adopting the philosophy of Bill Walsh: That is, take what the defense gives you. Throw the short, hook, the quick out. Don't force anything. That seven-yard hook to a 6-3 receiver in front of a 5-9 cornerback has become a high-percentage pass—and more and more teams are taking it. That's why pass attempts are escalating and receiving records are falling. The short passing game is replacing the running game as a means of ball and clock control.

"We had these discussions at Minnesota last year," Dungy said. "Why should we run the ball for a 3.9-yard average when every time I throw, my average is 6.1, 6.2 [yards]? If my objective is to move the ball and score, why shouldn't I throw every play? It's common sense."

So the Vikings threw the ball 642 times in 1995. They were one of six teams with 600 pass attempts (up from one in 1990). Five of those teams had 100-catch receivers. Everyone on offense is seeing and catching more balls. Brett Perriman, the second receiver on the Lions, caught 108 passes last season, and Bert Emanuel, the third receiver on the Atlanta Falcons, caught 74. Even a running back caught 100 passes for the first time in NFL history when Larry Centers snagged 101 for the Arizona Cardinals.

Moore, who broke the NFL receiving record by one catch and the Detroit club mark by a whopping 46, admits his '95 season has forced him to alter his goals. When he arrived in the NFL in 1991, he aspired to be an 80-catch, 1,000-yard receiver. He figured that would make him a Pro Bowler and earn him a spot in the elite. But not any more.

"The standard has changed," Moore said. "You need 100 catches and 1,500 yards to set yourself apart. That's where the bar is now. When you get there, you're in a whole 'nother category."

That's the way the NFL wants it. Ask any cornerback. □

ON THE RECORD

Baseball has always been a game of numbers, football a game of names.

Players forge an identity with their statistics. Babe Ruth, 60 home runs. Roger Maris, 61 homers. Joe DiMaggio, 56-game hitting streak. Cy Young, 500 victories. Nolan Ryan, 5,000 strikeouts. There is a romanticism about the statistical nature of baseball that does not exist in football.

"Baseball is a journey," said Seymour Siwoff, the president of Elias Sports Bureau, the official statistician of Major League Baseball and the NFL. "In football, every Sunday is a junior Super Bowl. The game means so much, each win means so much. If you're a die-hard fan, if your team loses, the week is terrible for you."

"You don't find that in baseball. If you lose, there's always tomorrow. In football, it's the single event. So each week is enormous. The game is what's important."

When Cal Ripken finally caught Lou Gehrig last September, climaxing a 13-year chase of the Iron Horse by playing in his record 2,131st consecutive game, the sport took a back seat to the player. Time was suspended by achievement. No one remembers if the Orioles won or lost.

Dan Marino set NFL career passing marks in four different games last fall, taking from Fran Tarkenton [below] the records for completions, attempts, yards, and touchdowns. But the number that stands out in Marino's season was the 9-7 record by the Dolphins that wound up costing Don Shula his job—not any of Marino's record-setting statistics.

Football does have its share of magical numbers. Marino's 48 touchdown passes in 1984. Eric Dickerson's 2,105 rushing yards in 1984. Even Dick "Night Train" Lane's 14 interceptions in 1952. But the records have always been secondary in football.

"In football, we remember the names," Siwoff said. "Does anyone who follows football not know the name of Jim Brown? Or Joe Montana? That's what's indelible in our mind. Not their records."

Payton Pace

Emmitt Smith of the Cowboys is comparable in size and demeanor to Walter Payton, and many people have speculated that he might eventually have a chance to surpass Payton's amazing record of 16,726 career rushing yards. Smith has played 93 regular-season NFL games, and it's useful to compare his career stats with Payton's through the same number of games. As it turned out, three other players—Jim Brown, Eric Dickerson, and Barry Sanders—had amassed more rushing yardage than either Payton OR Smith through their first 93 contests. Here are the top five through their first 93 games.

Payton's and Smith's numbers are very similar, with their rushing averages virtually identical (4.46 for Emmitt, 4.45 for Walter). Smith is about 300 yards ahead of Payton at this point of their respective careers. . .but then, Eric Dickerson was much further ahead of Payton than that, and Dickerson finished his career more than 3,000 yards short of Payton's total. As with Henry Aaron in baseball, what set Payton apart is not what he did in his early years, but how long he kept going. Payton went on to play 101 more games after his 93rd game, and gain over 8,000 additional yards.

So in order to catch Payton, Smith will need to keep gaining big yardage into at least his early 30s. He also has to contend with an active rival for the record: Sanders, who's a year older than Smith and nearly 1,200 career yards ahead of him. It'll be fascinating to watch those two as they try to reach Payton's place.

By The Numbers

A Revealing Look at the NFL Final Statistics

by STATS Inc.

Why Do the Chiefs Keep On Winning?

Although Marty Schottenheimer's Chiefs continue to come up short in the playoffs, they still have a unique distinction: They are the only team to make differential between takeaways and giveaways over the last six seasons (1990-95).

That differential of 90 averages out to 15 extra possessions for

Team	Takeaways	Giveaways	Differential
Kansas City	227	137	+90
Pittsburgh	217	171	+46
New York Giants	172	130	+42
Minnesota	211	182	+29
New York Jets	214	186	+28
Philadelphia	223	195	+28

the postseason each year since 1990. Turnovers have a lot to do with that, and the Chiefs have been winning the turnover war throughout the decade. Here's a list of the teams with the greatest

Kansas City each season since 1990, or about one per game. The Chiefs did nothing to hurt their reputation in this area last season, finishing with an NFL-best differential of +12 (33 takeaways, 21 giveaways).

Who Makes the Most Out of a Mistake?

On just about every network broadcast of an NFL game, the production crew will flash a graphic on the screen involving turnovers. The first column will show the number of turnovers each team has committed in the game, while the second column shows the number of points if any, those turnovers led to. It's that second column that we want to put under the microscope for the '95 season. Here are the 1995 team leaders in most points off opponents' turnovers.

Takeaway points refer to the total offensive and defensive points scored as a direct result of opponents' turnovers. The Vikings, who have been one of the most opportunistic defenses in the league the past four seasons under Tony Dungy, took the crown for the second season in a row. But it was Minnesota's offense that really cashed in when given a chance in '95: the Vikings' defense scored just three touchdowns this past season after tallying seven in '94. The Broncos—a team which did not even make this list—were actually the most productive team per takeaway, averaging 4.7 points every time they forced a turnover. The bad news for Denver was that the team forced just 21 turnovers.

Which Quarterbacks Produce the Most Big Plays?

There's nothing in football quite like a long pass which moves a club well downfield. We keep a stat called "big-play passes," or pass plays which gain 25 or more yards. Here are the 1995 leaders.

It's no surprise that the Packers' Brett Favre, the NFL's Most Valuable Player, led the league with 36 big-play passes last season. But a close second was Jeff George (below) of the Falcons, the only QB to produce at least 30 big plays in both 1994 and '95. The Dolphins' Dan Marino, the 1994 leader with 37 big plays, dropped out of the top 10 with 25 a year ago—the same total recorded by Troy Aikman of the Cowboys. And the 49ers' Steve Young, the runner-up to Marino with 33 big plays in 1994, had only 20 in '95.

Which Defenders Are The Toughest (And Easiest) To Burn?

Deion Sanders (above) may burn you up if you're not a Dallas (or Deion) fan, but it's awfully tough to burn HIM. While covering the opposing offense's targeted receiver, Sanders permitted the lowest percentage of completions of all of the league's cornerbacks and safeties. In other words, he was the toughest in the league to "burn." With three out of the top seven defenders on the list, it's easy to see why the Cowboys had such an effective pass defense last year.

Only 5-10, Patriot cornerback Maurice Hurst came up short last year in more ways than one. Quarterbacks consistently zipped the ball past his outstretched fingertips and into the hands of a waiting receiver. If this keeps up, Hurst may need to buy lifts for his shoes.

Which Quarterbacks Are the Best In the Red Zone?

Driving your team up and down the field is one thing, but getting the ball in the end zone is something else entirely. Some quarterbacks have a knack for lighting up a short field, but others can find it to be a monumental challenge. Here are last season's leaders in quarterback rating inside the opponent's 20-yard line (minimum 30 pass attempts).

The five quarterbacks above combined to throw 88 touchdown passes in the red zone and just seven interceptions. Between Troy Aikman (last season's leader) and Emmitt Smith, it's easy to see how the Cowboys scored 56 times in 63 total trips inside the 20-yard line.

Which Receivers Make Their Own Big Plays?

In a season that saw an amazing 23 1,000-yard receivers, the words "Yards After Catch" (YAC) quickly became common phrase among football fans. YAC are the yards gained by a receiver AFTER he catches the ball—the product of his own efforts rather than his quarterback's arm. En route to racking up an NFL-record 1,848 receiving yards last season, Jerry Rice collected 692 of the "YAC" variety to lead the NFL.

Player	YAC
Jerry Rice	692
Eric Metcalf	582
Herman Moore	560
Isaac Bruce	556
Tim Brown	534

But what about looking at YAC on a per-catch basis rather than for an entire season? Do the same names show up? Below are the 1995's top five wide receivers based on YAC per "YAC reception." A YAC reception is simply any catch where a receiver had at least one yard after the catch.

YAC	Rec	YAC	Avg
Courtney Hawkins	4	334	8.15
Willie Green	45	304	6.76
Qadry Ismail	32	203	6.34
Ernie Mills	34	215	6.32
Tim Brown	85	534	6.28

(minimum 30 YAC receptions)

Only Tim Brown (above) of the Raiders found his name on both lists, but he still finds himself well behind Tampa Bay's Courtney Hawkins, who racked up an amazing 8.15 YAC for every catch he made.

Who Are the Most Durable Runners?

You can use any number of yardsticks to measure a running back's durability, but one useful method is to look at the runners who produce the best averages AFTER they've already carried the ball 20 times in a game. The following chart shows the backs with the best rushing averages in the NFL after their 20th carry of a game last year.

Who's who of some of the best power runners in the league, the kind who can take advantage of tiring defenses as the game goes on. Chris Warren also led the league in fourth quarter/overtime rushing yards (405). It's easy to see why San Francisco tried to sign Rodney Hampton (right)—and why the Giants had to match the 49ers' offer to retain him. And check out Curtis Martin, 82 of his carries this past season came after his 20th carry of a game. Not bad for a guy whose size and durability were big question marks coming out of college.

It's sometimes said about a runner that he "gets stronger as the game goes on," but as you can see, few runners boast impressive averages once they've carried the ball this many times. On the other hand, they're usually going against defenses stacked against the run by this point of a game, and even a 3.5-yard average will help a club.

Player	Att	Yds	Avg
Chris Warren	37	168	4.5
Rodney Hampton	36	157	4.4
Terry Allen	49	203	4.1
Curtis Martin	82	328	4.0
Thurman Thomas	39	155	4.0
Ernie Rhett	43	161	3.7
Emmitt Smith	61	219	3.6
Aaron Hayden	24	76	3.2
Ricky Watters	45	128	2.8
Edgar Bennett	37	4	2.5

How Will Jimmy Johnson Do In Miami?

Jimmy Johnson's return to Florida seems to be a perfect fit. After winning a national championship at the University of Miami, Johnson took the Cowboys from a 1-15 record to Super Bowl glory in just four seasons. But do those championship rings mean anything once the Dolphins kick off 1996? History says no.

Prior to Johnson, there have been nine coaches in NFL history who have taken a team to a Super Bowl before eventually moving on to another job. None has been able to find success with a second franchise.

Coach	Team	G	Pct	Team	G	Pct
Vince Lombardi	Packers	132	.758	Redskins	14	.571
John Rauch	Raiders	46	.772	Bills	28	.268
Hank Stram	Chiefs	218	.615	Saints	28	.250
Don McCafferty	Colts	38	.697	Lions	14	.464
Tom Flores	Raiders	47	.619	Seahawks	48	.292
Forrest Gregg	Bengals	61	.557	Packers	63	.405
Bill Parcells	Giants	138	.620	Patriots	49	.429
Dan Reeves	Broncos	197	.596	Giants	50	.520
Sam Wyche	Bengals	132	.485	Buccaneers	64	.359
TOTAL		1109	.620		358	.387

C. R. Rilev

Of the coaches who stayed more than one season with their second franchise, only New York's Dan Reeves has a winning record. Johnson may very well take the Dolphins to the Super Bowl, but he'll have to buck history to get it done.

Which Receivers Have the Surest Hands?

A receiver's goal at the start of each game is to catch every pass he can get his hands on. Such a goal over the course of an entire game is commendable, but how many receivers can claim that they didn't miss a pass all year? STATS Inc. reporters keep track of both dropped passes and the number of balls they deem catchable, and only one receiver posted a perfect record last year: Mike Sherrard (left). Here's the top 10 in percentage of passes caught:

Player	Catchable Passes	Passes Dropped	% Caught
Mike Sherrard	44	0	100.0
Harvey Williams	55	1	98.2
Irv Smith	46	1	97.8
Ed McCaffrey	40	1	97.5
J.J. Stokes	39	1	97.4
Larry Centers	104	3	97.1
Brent Jones	62	2	96.8
Derek Loville	90	3	96.7
Michael Irvin	115	4	96.5
Bill Brooks	55	2	96.4

Such sure-handedness would be a monumental feat for just about anyone else, but it's really nothing new for Sherrard—the year before, he dropped just two passes.

Who Can Get That First Down?

One of last season's most memorable moments came in Philadelphia, when Emmitt Smith and the Cowboys came up short on a crucial 4th-and-1 late against the Eagles. Memories of that game raise an interesting question: Who ARE the NFL's best short-yardage runners? Here are the NFL leaders over the last three seasons in 3rd-and-short (three yards or less) conversions. As the data shows, Smith's failure in Philadelphia was the exception rather than the rule.

Player	Carries	1st Downs	Pct
Marcus Allen	28	25	89.3
Emmitt Smith	35	29	82.9
Natrone Means	23	19	82.6
Jerome Bettis	22	18	81.8
Rodney Hampton	20	15	75.0

(minimum 20 carries)

Marcus Allen (right) is the only runner ahead of Smith, having made a first down on all but three of his 28 attempts. Size often helps considerably in making a first down, as the presence of widebodies Natrone Means and Jerome Bettis indicates. □

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT

GRADING THE TEAMS

by FRANK LITSKY NEW YORK TIMES

● It all sounds so simple. In the National Football League's annual draft, the best player is chosen first, the next best player second, and so forth.

Don't count on it. Almost every NFL team ranked Lawrence Phillips, the Nebraska running back, as the best player in the 1996 draft. At 220 pounds, he ran 40 yards in 4.54 seconds with power and flair. He could find a hole and barre through it. He could carry the ball all day.

So why did the first five teams pass on Phillips before the St. Louis Rams scooped him up? The answer was Phillips's off-the-field troubles, and it illustrated the crapshoot aspect of the draft. You may know what your draftee can do on the field, but has he been or will he be a good citizen? He does not have to win a good-guy award, but will he stay out of trouble? Phillips did not stay trouble-free in college. When he pleaded no contest to assaulting a former girlfriend, a court put him on probation. The Nebraska team suspended him for six games.

Then came the draft, which started this way:

1. New York Jets They could have used a power runner, but they are too conservative an organization for such a controversial player. They took WR Keyshawn Johnson of USC.

2. Jacksonville Jaguars They had runners, needed defense badly and tapped OLB Kevin Hardy of Illinois.

3. Arizona Cardinals They needed a runner. They also needed a pass rusher and chose DE Simeon Rice of Illinois.

4. Baltimore Ravens The former Cleveland Browns did not want to offend their conservative new home, where the big sports hero is Cal Ripken. They took OT Jonathan Ogden of UCLA.

5. New York Giants More conservative than the Jets, and they also had running backs, so they drafted DE Cedric Jones of Oklahoma.

6. St. Louis Rams Finally, a team willing to take a chance on Phillips. As owner Georgia Frontiere said coldly, "if it helps our team, that's all I care about." And perhaps former quarterback and current TV analyst Joe Theismann put it best when he said, "This is not a league of angels."

Phillips was the best in a strong group of running backs, although two others also slipped. Leeland McElroy of Texas A&M to the Cardinals in the second round and Karim Abdul-Jabbar of UCLA to the Miami Dolphins in the third.

The strongest position in the draft was wide receiver, with five chosen in the first round and seven in the first 34 picks. Of the 254 players drafted, only eight were quarterbacks, with none in the first round, only one in the second, and none in the third.

Who fared the best and who did the worst in the draft? It takes about three years to assess a draft, but who can wait? So here is a quick analysis of this year's draft and why some teams did what they did.

ARIZONA CARDINALS

A sound draft that might have been even better had they taken OT Jonathan Ogden rather than DE Simeon Rice of Illinois with the third choice overall. But Rice was the best pass rusher on the board, even though he was double-teamed so much last year. "I think Simeon Rice can stop the run," says Vince Tobin, the Cards' new coach. "He thinks he can." Rice makes sense because DT Eric Swann wanted out and DE Clyde Simmons is well-worn at 32. Boomer Esiason, the new quarterback, may not have Ogden, but OT Lomas Brown, a quality free-agent addition, will help. So will RB Leeland McElroy of Texas A&M, a Thurman Thomas clone and second-round steal, and TE Johnny McWilliams of USC, a third-round bargain. But the secondary still needs help. (GRADE: B+)

ATLANTA FALCONS

Lousy no matter how the Falcons try to rationalize it. The No. 1 pick was part of last year's deal that brought QB Jeff George, who wants a lot more money. Two days before the draft, No. 2 went to Seattle for S Patrick Bates, who sat out last season because he could not get more playing time. On the third round, with the 84th pick overall, the Falcons finally drafted someone: DT Shannon Brown of Alabama, intense and strong but not durable. The fourth round produced RB Richard Huntley of Winston-

Salem, who is good but not the breakaway runner the Falcons wanted, and CB Aaron Bolden who played in Canada last year after a spell at Mississippi Delta Junior College. (GRADE: C-)

EXTREME RAVENS

A smart, productive draft for the former Cleveland Browns. With the fourth pick overall, they passed up RB Lawrence Phillips and took squeaky clean OT Jonathan Ogden of UCLA, the best prospect at his position since Anthony Munoz in 1980. Coach Ted Marchibroda of the Ravens called Ogden "probably the best athlete in the draft." He had better be because for now he will play guard, a strange decision. Later in the first round came ILB Ray Lewis of Miami, a playmaker for an aging linebacker corps. The Cowboys loved him. Second-round DB DeRon Jenkins of Tennessee is a good cover man and fifth-round WR Jermaine Lewis of Maryland can return punts. But not a badly needed running back in the bunch. (GRADE: B)

BUFFALO BILLS

Much depends on whether the first choice, WR Eric Moulds of Mississippi State, will change his ways. The Bills needed receivers badly because at the time they did not know if the unhappy Andre Reed and Bill Brooks would return. They picked the talented but undisciplined Moulds, pegged by some personnel people as moody, selfish, and inconsistent. One coach said he wouldn't take him on the last round. But Moulds is strong and he averaged 28.8 yards on kickoff returns. Second-round DE Gabe Northern of LSU was a reach. Sleeper: Sixth-round OG/C Dusty Zeigler of Notre Dame. For what it's worth, six of the Bills' 10 draftees are/were basketball players. (GRADE: B)

Leeland McElroy
Arizona Cardinals

Keyshawn Johnson

STREET AND SMITH'S PRO FOOTBALL

CAROLINA PANTHERS

A good draft that found a running back to take the heat of QB Kerry Collins. With the eighth pick overall, the Panthers passed on Eddie George and Leeland McElroy and tapped Tim Biakabutuka of Michigan, who is fast and shifty and hits the hole hard. He is a stranger to pass catching, but bright enough to master anything. He was born in Zaire, moved with his family to Montreal as a youngster, and learned English from watching Bugs Bunny and other TV cartoons. The Panthers found a needed receiver in second-rounder Muhsin Muhammad of Michigan State, who has size, speed, and a quick move after the catch. Fourth-round OT Norberto Garrido of USC is a sometimes lazy load as a pass blocker. (GRADE: B+)

BRITAIN BEARS

A nice draft because the needs were filled with quality players. In a division where Herman Moore, Cris Carter, and Alvin Harper destroy cornerbacks, the Bears traded up to get first-round CB Walt Harris of Mississippi State to complement Donnell Woolford. Harris can also play safety. To replace Jeff Graham, who left as a free agent, they picked up second-rounder Bobby Engram, a big-play receiver and kick returner from Penn State. Sleeper, fifth-round OG Chris Villarrial of Indiana (PA) a strongman who also plays center. Only a tight end was missing. (GRADE: B+)

CINCINNATI BENGALS

A neat job of getting players who will produce for years, especially for the major need: the offensive line. The Bengals targeted OT Willie Anderson (size-19 shoe) of Auburn, the best offensive lineman in the draft after Jonathan Ogden, and got him on the first round. He's only 20 and still learning, but he can learn this year behind Joe Walter. Second-rounder Marco Battaglia of Rutgers is a fine receiver and natural H-back and should help an offense that will be potent with healthy RB Ki-Jana Carter. Sleeper: Fifth-round FS Greg Myers of Colorado State, smart and productive off the field (3.7 GPA in pre-med) and on.

John Mobley
Denver Broncos

(GRADE: B+)

DALLAS COWBOYS

A weird draft for the Super Bowl champions. The priority was getting help for the defensive line because four of the eight players in the rotation left in free agency. But the Cowboys traded out of the first round and then took second-round DE Kavika Pittman of McNeese State. Who? He's athletic (a 6-11 high jumper and basketball player in high school), but he's as much of a project as first-round DE Shante Carver two years ago. With DE Charles Haley and DT Tony Tolbert returning from surgery, Pittman must produce quickly. Later in the second round came ILB Randall Godfrey of Georgia, who will get quick playing time. For a team worried about Michael Irvin's off-field problems, third-round WR Stepfret Williams of Northeast Louisiana was a logical pick.

(GRADE: C-)

DENVER BRONCOS

For a team that couldn't swing a pre-draft deal for DT Eric Swann (Arizona didn't like those high-priced, down-side veterans it would have had to take) and then couldn't get the pass rusher it wanted, the Broncos more than held their own. First-round OLB John Mobley comes from Kutztown State, a small school that produced Andre Reed and Bruce Harper. Mobley starred in the Blue-Gray game and Senior Bowl, but is he big enough (6-1, 230)? Second-round CB Tory James of LSU and fourth-round QB Jeff Lewis of Northern Arizona filled needs, although James is not a burner, is not physical, and plays soft. Lewis will learn at John Elway's knee.

(GRADE: B)

DETROIT LIONS

A hard draft to knock. With Chris Spielman gone and Mike Johnson about to be waived as a salary-cap problem, a good linebacker was needed. With Lomas Brown and Doug Widell gone, an offensive lineman was needed. With two picks on the first round, both needs were filled. First came OLB Reggie Brown of Texas A&M, who is fast, active, and a hitter. Then came OG Jeff Hartings of Penn State, a good blocker to protect Scott Mitchell for the Lions' quick-pass offense. Both should start immediately. The Lions had only five picks, and the last three went to upgrade a defense that crumbled in the playoffs last season.

(GRADE: B)

GREEN BAY PACKERS

It may turn out well. The Packers are already a winning team, and they found blockers to protect QB Brett Favre and a quarterback for the future to learn under him. They took prime blockers in the first round in OT John Michels of USC and C Mike Flanagan of UCLA in the third. Michels can learn this year from Ken Ruettgers (if Ruettgers is healthy enough to play) how to stop power rushers. Second-round WR Derrick Mayes of Notre Dame, third-round CB Tyrone Williams of Nebraska, and fourth-round RB Chris Dinkins of Minnesota can help now. Seventh-round QB Kyle Wachholtz of USC has time.

(GRADE: B-)

HOUSTON OILERS

They played the draft game and won. Their target was RB Eddie George, Ohio State's durable Heisman Trophy winner. They traded down from the eighth pick to the 17th and back up to 14th, and while many waited for them to take a defensive lineman, they grabbed George for their one-back offense. A clue came the day before the draft when they waived high-priced RB Gary Brown. In the second round, they added DT Bryant Mix, who played defensive end at Alcorn State, and OG Jason Layman, who also played tackle and center for Tennessee. Interesting pick in the sixth round, S/CB Anthony Dorsett Jr. of Pitt, son of the Hall of Fame running back.

(GRADE: B)

INDIANAPOLIS COLTS

A good draft if only because their first-rounder was WR Marvin Harrison of Syracuse, an exciting receiver and punt returner and a steal at No. 19. If Flipper Anderson makes it back from rehab, he, Sean Dawkins, and Harrison will make life miserable for opposing cornerbacks. As Lindy Infante, the new head coach, says, "Marvin Harrison plays fast." The secondary should get needed help from CB Dedric Mathis of Houston, a good cover man who is long on athletic skills, short on technique. Fourth-round FB Brian Milne of Penn State, an NCAA discus champion, overcame Hodgkin's disease as a teen-ager.

(GRADE: B)

Eddie George

JACKSONVILLE JAGUARS

A neat draft because first-round OLB Kevin Hardy of Illinois may have been the best player available and second-round DE Tony Brackens of Texas should have gone in the first round. This second-year expansion team needed a lot—mostly defenders and wide receivers. The defense, which made only 17 sacks all last season, got immediate help from Hardy, who is quick, willing, and coachable; and Brackens, an explosive pass rusher. Four of the last six picks were wide receivers, including sixth-round Chris Doering, a slim, slow, walk-on who became Florida's all-time touchdown reception leader. (GRADE: A-)

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS

An odd draft for a team that missed a big chance last year in free agency, to do little in the draft, the Chiefs wanted a linebacker, a tight end, a quarterback, and a kicker. The first two picks were hard-playing safeties: first-rounder Jerome Woods of Memphis and second-rounder Reggie Tongue of Oregon State. Both will be tried at cornerback, partly because S Mark Collins and S Doug Terry decided to return. Fourth-round OLB Donnie Edwards of UCLA is aggressive and gets the most out of his talent. No tight end or quarterback, no kicker. (GRADE: C)

MIAMI DOLPHINS

A puzzling draft, at most as if the new coach Jimmy Johnson, intentionally backed himself into a corner just to prove he could fight his way out. The defense lost its three best players (ILB Bryan Cox, CB Troy Vincent, and DE Marco Coeman) and needed a quick fix. But will first-round DT Daryl Gardener of Baylor furnish it, or will he continue to cruise and play only as hard as he has to? "I'm sure there could have been a safer pick," Johnson says, "but do you want to be safe and good or do you want to take a chance and be great?" Third-round CB

Dorian Brew of Kansas is a good cover man. Third-rounder RB Karim Abdul-Jabbar of UCLA is a steal, a potential every-down player. (GRADE: B)

MINNESOTA VIKINGS

A workmanlike job in the early rounds. The defense, uncharacteristically soft last year, needed an outside pass rusher and got a good one in the first round in explosive DE Duane Clemons of California. He is projected as an outside linebacker. He has strength and technique and should help the pass rush immediately. Second-round DT James Manley of Vanderbilt is an unsophisticated wide body ranked only 20th among defensive linemen by the authoritative Ourad's Guide, but he could still become a pile-driving nose tackle. RB Moe Williams of Kentucky was a third-round bargain and could be a third-down star. (GRADE: B-)

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS

A real good job because owner Bob Kraft overruled his coach, Bill Belichick, who wanted defensive help first. The personnel people preferred WR Terry Glenn of Ohio State, who has 4.48 speed for outside routes and toughness for inside. But can he block? "We invested $42 million in Drew Bledsoe at quarterback," Kraft says, "and I think this helps to round out the investment." Second-round FS Lawyer Milloy of Washington is a big hitter who will replace Myron Guyton. Third-round OLB Tedy Bruschi of Arizona is really a quick defensive end who should thrive in his new position. In an embarrassing sequence, the Patriots drafted DT Christian Peter of Nebraska in the fifth round despite his history of off-the-field problems, then cut him three days later. (GRADE: B)

NEW ORLEANS SAINTS

An excellent job by a team whose once-feared defense had disintegrated. Its first three choices were on defense, and the new Saints should make a difference. First-round CB Alex Molden (4.38, 40-inch vertical jump) of Oregon was the best cover man in the draft, a big asset in a pass-happy division. The Saints also signed CB Eric Allen and CB Mark McMillan as free agents, but no team has ever complained about having too many cornerbacks. Second-round FS Jerod Cherry of California runs like a cornerback and hits like a safety. DE Brady Smith of Colorado State is an agile pass rusher and a third-round steal. (GRADE: B+)

NEW YORK GIANTS

What started as a nightmare turned into a tolerable draft. The Giants had the fifth pick overall and did not need or want RB Lawrence Phillips. They were sure someone above them would take him, so that WR Keyshawn Johnson, DE Simeon Rice, OLB Kevin Hardy, or OT Jonathan Ogden would drop to them. Instead, Phillips was there and the four others were gone. The stunned Giants rescued themselves with DE Cedric Jones of Oklahoma, a pass rusher and three-down player. Second-round WR Amani Toomer of Michigan is a good blocker and a clever runner after the catch who fills a big need. Third-round OT Roman Oben of Louisville may eventually replace the departed Jumbo Ellett and fourth-round QB Danny Kanell of Florida State will challenge Tommy Maddox for the backup job. (GRADE: B-)

NEW YORK JETS

A great draft, as befits the team with the first pick overall. That honor and the big cash it brings went to WR Keyshawn Johnson of USC, a Michael Irvin-type game-breaker with speed, acceleration, and a six-figure shoe contract. In the second round, when a running back seemed likely, the Jets took WR Alex Van Dyke of Nevada, who caught 98 passes as a junior and 129 as a senior. So now new QB Neil O'Donnell has targets that the Jets lacked last year. After those receivers, the Jets took five defensive players. Two could start immediately: third-round CB Ray Mickens of Texas A&M, a fiery cover man, and fifth-round SS Marcus Coleman of Texas Tech. (GRADE: B+)

HAWKLAND RAIDERS

This could be a big draft if TE Rickey Dudley of Ohio State turns out to be in the mold of Dave Casper and Todd Christensen. The Raiders gave up their picks in the first, second, and fourth rounds to move up eight places and get the former basketball player. He is lean, agile, fast, and fearless, and many teams coveted him. He will learn to block, but meanwhile he provides newly resigned QB Jeff Hostetler with an inside target to take the heat off the flyboy wideouts. Second-round OLB Lance Johnstone of Temple can be a steal if he does not try to finesse every blocker. One negative: The Raiders did not get a badly needed offensive tackle. (GRADE: B)

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES

A draft with potential. When OLBs John Mobley and Reggie Brown and WRs Eddie Kennison and Marvin Harrison were gone late in the first round, the Eagles turned to OT Jermaine Mayberry of Texas A&M-Kingsville, a good, strong run blocker who sometimes coasted against Division II foes. He may be tried at guard. In the second round, passing up a trade for TE Johnny Mitchell of the Jets, they took TE Jason Dunn of Eastern Kentucky, a gifted athlete who even returned punts last year. Second-round S Brian Dawkins of Clemson is a hitter and will probably start. Third-round QB Bobby Hoyer of Ohio State is smart and could start in a year. (GRADE: C+)

PITTSBURGH STEELERS

The verdict on this draft is in the hands (and legs) of RB Jerome Bettis. With John L. Williams out loose and Bam Morris facing drug charges, this Super Bowl team needed a heavy-duty runner. They traded essentially a second-round choice to the Rams for Bettis, a star his first two pro seasons but foiled last year by eight-man fronts. Other needs were filled quickly, too. First-round

OT Jamain Stephens of North Carolina A&T is explosive and raw and a reach unless he learns to play hard all the time. Third-round OLB Steve Conley of Arkansas has natural pass-rushing talent and much to learn. Sixth-round Spence Fischer does not look like the eventual quarterback to replace the departed Neil O'Donnell. (GRADE: B-)

ST. LOUIS RAMS

A great draft until proven otherwise. They signed unrestricted free agents (DE Leslie O'Neal and MLB Robert Jones) for defense and drafted for offense. In the first round, when the first five teams passed on RB Lawrence Phillips of Nebraska, the Rams grabbed him. With Jerome Bettis shipped to the Steelers, Phillips is an instant starter. Later in the first round, they took WR Eddie Kennison of LSU, a good receiver and blocker who also returns punts and kickoffs. Second-round Tony Banks of Michigan State was the first quarterback drafted. He has a strong arm, and when he becomes accurate on deep passes he may start. Another second-round, TE Ernie Conwell of Washington, has heart. (GRADE: A-)

SAN DIEGO CHARGERS

Not much of a draft. A year ago, GM Bobby Beathard traded his 1996 first-round pick for a 1995 second-round pick he liked. He did it again this time (for the fifth time in seven years) because he needed a wide receiver. He took one he liked in Bryan Still of Virginia Tech, a skinny burner who can be outmuscled. The Chargers' own second-round pick brought a bulked-up OLB Patrick Sapp of Clemson, who played quarterback for three years and seems uncomfortable now. Second round? Even he was surprised. Third-round TE Brian Roche of San Jose State will help despite erratic blocking. Sixth-round C Bryan Stoltzberg reportedly made only two bad snaps out of 2,900 for Colorado. (GRADE: C-)

Marcus Jones
Tampa Bay Buccaneers

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS

A poor job unless they know something we don't know. Last year's draft, except for WR J.J. Stokes, was unproductive, and part of the cost for moving up to get Stokes was this year's first-round pick. So this spring, their first pick was second-round DE Israel Ifeanyi of USC, a 25-year-old Nigerian who has played football only four years. He is destined for Rickey Jackson's DE/OLB job. Third-round WR Terrell Owens of UT-Chattanooga is big and willing. No cornerback, no offensive lineman, but a sixth-round RB, Stephen Pitts of Penn State, who is a steal if he avoids injury. A name to remember: Fifth-round WR Ifeanyi Uwaezuoke of California and Nigeria. (GRADE: C-)

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS

A fine start but then not much. The player they wanted all along was OG Pete Kendall, who played tackle at Boston College. He's solid and smart but not overpowering. Instead of taking him with the 14th pick of the first round, they traded down twice, picked up veteran DT Glenn Montgomery and a third-round pick and still got him with the 21st pick. Second-round CB Fred Thomas of Tennessee-Martin is fluid, small, green, and promising. Third-round OT Robert Barr of Rutgers is slow and inconsistent. Badly needed defensive ends were taken on the fourth and seventh rounds, but they seem unlikely to help an anemic pass rush. (GRADE: C+)

TAMPA BAY BUCCANEERS

If they play as well as they drafted, the Bucs will have their first winning season since 1982 and then some. The new coach, Tony Dungy, has always coached defense. His already lethargic defense lost its two starting tackles to free agency, and he had four of the first 41 picks to remedy that. He did it with two sound first-round choices: DE Regan Upshaw of California, a high-energy pass rusher in the John Randle mold, and DT Marcus Jones of North Carolina, who is steady and strong and an immediate starter at nose tackle. One second-round pick brought FB Mike Alstott of Purdue, the best fullback in the draft, and the other went to the Chargers for a 1997 No. 1. (GRADE: A)

WASHINGTON REDSKINS

Fair at best. In the days before the draft, they traded the sixth pick overall to the Rams for DT Sean Gilbert, who can be boom or bust. The Rams used that pick to get RB Lawrence Phillips. The Redskins traded their second- and third-round spots to the Cowboys for the last pick of the first round and used it to get OT Andre Johnson of Penn State, who is only a fair run blocker and probably would have lasted another round. He becomes the heir apparent to Jim Lachey. If fourth-round RB Stephen Davis of Auburn learns to protect the ball and block, he will be a steal. There was little help for the needy defense. PEYTON'S PLACE

A Sneak Preview of the Top Prospects in the '97 NFL Draft

by JIM CARLEY

There could be some real suspense when it comes time for the 1997 NFL draft. And the mini-drama will be at Peyton's Place.

Peyton Manning, that is. The intrigue might center around whether Peyton, the All-America quarterback at Tennessee, can persuade his father, Archie, that it is better to take $40 million in the hand rather than wait for $50 million in the bush.

Peyton is a junior this season and Archie, an NFL star with the New Orleans Saints and Houston Oilers, has been dead set against Peyton leaving school early. It has to do with commitments and honoring a four-year scholarship.

Peyton set UT records for completions (244), attempts (380), and passing yards (2,954) and has the pro scouts drooling. Those same scouts are reluctant to talk about underclassmen for fear of incurring the wrath of college coaches, but they have plenty to say about Manning if you promise anonymity. They say he's big (6-5, 215) and has a powerful arm. Those aren't his most valuable assets.

"Where he really is great is just knowing the game," one NFC scout said. "He has a great feel for the game. There are guys with stronger arms and guys who are bigger and faster. But there aren't many who have his ability to control a game."

"He's more like a Joe Montana than a John Elway. Ever since he was little, his dad has shown him the intricacies of the game. He knows it better than just about anyone coming out of the college game."

Insiders say Tennessee coaches were stunned when Manning showed up as a freshman. "They said he knew more about reading defenses and understood the offense better as a freshman that year than Heath Shuler did when he left," one scout said. "[Peyton] had an unusual tutelage. His dad taught him an awful lot."

Thus Manning probably won't have a lot more to learn after this season. For that reason and several others, most observers expect Manning to convince his father that the time to come out is next spring. As one scout put it, "He'll probably be the No. 1 pick in the draft if he comes out. Hell, he might have been the No. 1 pick last year."

"And here's the thing—if he is the No. 1 pick, he stands to make $40 million. Just think about it. Shuler was the third pick three years ago and got $19 million. Steve McNair was the third pick two years ago and got $28. At that rate of inflation, a top three quarterback would have gotten $37 million last year if one had been good enough to go that high then."

Archie Manning has repeatedly told scouts that money is no object, that staying in school for four years is more important. But what if Peyton were to be injured his senior year?

"I don't know where you can get enough insurance to protect yourself against that kind of loss," one scout said. "If he puts up the kind of numbers everyone thinks he will, I don't see how he could not come out."

There were no quarterbacks drafted in the first round in 1996 (for the first time since 1988). The best of the class of '97—Florida's Danny Wuerffel, Notre Dame's Ron Powlus, USC's Brad Ottom, Arizona State's Jake Plummer, and Brigham Young's Steve Sarkisian—have a lot to prove this year before they will be considered solid first-round picks.

"There won't be a quarterback taken in the first round," one scout said, "until Manning comes out, whether it's this year or next." □

BY ED BOUCHETTE

Kevin Greene had never seen such a blitz. They came from everywhere, wild men dressed in black and gold, fire in their eyes.

It was something a pass-rushing linebacker such as Green could love. Only this time they were chasing him. Steelers fans 15 or 20, spotted Greene while they were waiting for playoff tickets, broke line and swarmed him. All because he wanted to join and celebrate with his fans as they waited for hours in the cold

"I thought I could go out, get the people going, high-five everyone," Greene said.

Instead, he found himself the focal point of a mob scene as fans rushed him and in their excitement pounded him upon the back, the shoulders and even his head. The tables turned and Greene felt like a quarterback caught in a pass rush. He ran and they ran after him. He opened the door to his car and jumped in as they banged on the windows.

"C'mon, Greene, let's party!"

That's Kevin Greene, life of the party. Football is not so much his sport or his job as it is his passion. He felt relieved to escape with his health after those crazed Steelers fans mobbed him in 1995. Know what? He was back at the same spot in 1996, this time delivering 100 Big Macs to Steelers fans waiting in line, hungry for playoff tickets.

Greene attacks life the way he does quarterbacks

"Pass rushing," he says, "is not just technique and proper stance, reacting and getting off the ball. Pass rushing is more desire, it's more of a hunger than anything.

"I'm intense in every endeavor, whether it's football or horseshoes or croquet. I mean, I play intense croquet."

You'll have to take his word for it, but when it comes to football, there is proof. He led the NFL in 1994 with 14 sacks, in 11 seasons with the Rams and Pittsburgh, Greene rang up 107 sacks, seventh-most in NFL history.

"It's just a big play, a show-stopper," Greene says. If you can sack the quarterback in this league, you can go a long way. And they'll treat you right financially. It's been a blessing for me."

Captain Crunch, they call him. Greene is a captain in the Army National Guard, son of a retired Army colonel and Vietnam veteran, brother of an Army major, who was a Gulf War veteran, 101st Airborne. Captain Greene, tank company commander at your service

"You're in control of 65-70 tons of steel, traveling at 40-45 miles per hour. It's a thrill," he says. "I've driven tanks. I've fired them. I've loaded them.

"I believe in America. I believe in the flag. I believe in freedom. I believe a strong national defense is the only way to deter foreign military aggression."

Non-patriotic he's not.

Several Steelers departed in the off-season via free-agency, but Kevin Greene will probably be the one that Steelers fans miss the most.

"Atilla the Haig," former Rams cornerback LeRoy Irvin once called him. "You know, Alexander Haig. To me, he's all about hitting the beach and dropping grenades. He talks military all the time. He wears those fatigues. And he always talks about 0700 hours. He's not from here. He's not from Earth."

"Hey," Greene points out, "this is pro football. Heck, this baby gets ugly. Only animals play this game. A linebacker is ugly, slobbery and drooling.

"Every time I see him on television," said Macho Man Randy Savage, "I think I'm seeing Hulk Hogan running around the field."

It was during Super Bowl week that he took an opportunity not only to meet Hogan, but to wrestle on his side of the mat. Greene, two teammates and a Steelers trainer took a private jet from Phoenix to Las Vegas courtesy of World Championship Wrestling. Greene appeared on the televised show, traded insults with Hogan's oppoget started. Get to the Super Bowl and you get offered things. Kevin will be great in pro wrestling someday. He's got the hair, and he's got the integrity."

Integrity? This IS pro wrestling we're talking about, correct? Anyway, the WCW has been pursuing Greene to join them and he might, once his football career ends. But he's not ready to end it just yet. Greene's sack total slipped from a league-leading 14 in 1994 to nine last season and some football people believed the end was near. Kevin Greene was not among them, of course. He attracted more double teams and even without that there are many pass-rushers in the NFL who would like to have had nine sacks last season.

He broke his hand in a preseason game, but did not miss a start because of it and never used it as an excuse. He has remained healthy throughout his career and believes he has several good seasons left.

"I look back and I say, 'Where has the time gone?' For some reason, year-in and year out, I've been blessed by the good Lord with athletic ability and health. Last season was my 11th season and I have healthy virgin knees. My knees have never even been scoped. This is a miracle in itself to have played 11 years in the NFL and not even have a scope. There's nothing wrong with my knees."

Nothing wrong with the knees, nothing wrong with the passion, nothing wrong with the results.

"I see a lot of athletes just playing the game to put money in the bank," Greene sneers. "That's not the way this game is supposed to be played. Sure, all of that stuff on the outside is great to have, but you have to play this game for the love of the game. You've got to miss it in the offseason and you've got to look forward to it when the season's coming."

Why stop now? Up ahead there's another long line of fans waiting in the cold for playoff tickets, waiting for Kevin Greene to appear.

Ed Bouchette covers the Pittsburgh Steelers for the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

The WWF and WCW will have to wait until after his football career is finished, said Kevin Greene at a press conference announcing him as a PLAYERS INC spokesman.

Hey, I'm him. I'm an emotional person. I just let it flow. I'm not one to hold back what I feel."

In fact, Greene is so emotional that if he ever became a football coach he would be . . . Bill Cowher!

"Fortunately," Greene says, "I've never been on the receiving end of a severe butt-chewing from Coach Cowher yet. Although I hear it's quite exhilarating. Feeling all that slobber and spit come your way . . . you can't dodge 'em all."

His heroes range from general George Patton to Hulk Hogan, and since Greene began allowing his blonde locks to bloom during the 1994 season, he has been compared to the latter.

nent, Ric Flair, then helped Hogan and Savage toss two wrestlers out of the ring.

Some writers criticized Greene for those antics five days before the Super Bowl, even though it was the players' day off and what he did in the ring hardly approached the danger of a typical football practice.

"I figured I could sit in my room and beat my head against the wall," Greene says, "take the car they give us and drive 500 miles, or go where the action is."

Typically, Greene chose the action.

"Kevin Greene will definitely have a second career in pro wrestling," Steelers quarterback Mike Tomczak says. "You know, that's how second careers

BY KELLY CARTER

It is a drizzly spring afternoon and several of the Raiders have flocked to a bowling alley near LAX after working out. As they roll strikes, they express themselves in various ways. There's James Jett doing a hip-yrating thing. Billy Joe Hobert bellows loudly enough to rattle the pins. Then there's Tim Brown, who merely raises his arms in exultation.

So typical of Tim. The conservative one of the bunch.

"I'm basically a very boring person, but I really like it," says Brown, the Raiders' Pro Bowl receiver.

If anyone out there thinks all NFL players have outspoken personalities ala Deion Sanders, think again and meet Tim Brown.

"I come from a very, very religious family where only the right things in life were accepted," says Brown, who grew up in Dallas and is one of six children. "Smoking and drinking and all that kind of stuff just was not something you even thought about doing."

Bowling, golfing and going to the movies area about the extent of his social activities. If his teammates are going to a club, they know not to call

"Timmie is a real nice guy," says teammate Harvey Williams, "but he's reeal conservative."

Brown gets some ribbing from his teammates but never maliciously.

"He has a presence on this football team," Williams says. "He's been there. He's one of the Heisman Trophy winners. He goes to the Pro Bowl every year. You've got to respect a guy like that. We tease him a lot, but also we've got a lot of respect for him too and a lot of people look up to him. And I'm one of them."

Brown does not strut around with a holier-than-thou attitude, which is another reason his teammates respect him so. Although projecting a positive image comes easily, he said he does not think there should be anything anyone HAS to do.

"I just believe there's certain things you should want to do," Brown says. "Every time I go to that stadium and I see maybe 100 people who may have my jersey on, I feel I owe those people something. I'm somewhat responsible for how they look at me. I take that to heart. For me, it's not a situation where I have to constantly think about that because I am who I am."

"I'm never in a situation where I'm out at a bar and I'm about to be in a fight and I have to think, 'Well, is this really good for my image?' because I'm hardly ever at bars, if ever. No one is asking you to be a role model, but the bottom line is when you have 4 and 5 and 8, 9, 10-year-old kids who are looking up to you, you owe those kids something. It's incumbent upon athletes to some kind of way control themselves while they're out in public. Whatever you want to do in the privacy of your own home you should."

Brown just doesn't talk the talk. He walks the walk too. He is heavily involved in Athletes & Entertainers for Kids, a charity that empowers underprivileged children through positive

With five Pro Bowls behind him, Tim Brown is clearly the anchor of the Raider's offense.

STRAT-O-MATIC PRO FOOTBALL

4-3, 3-4, nickel defense, or whatever, if that's your bag, Strat-O-Matic is for you. Yes, you can actually set up these and countless other defenses to battle pro football's varied offense formations including full house backfield, 4 wide receiver or 2 tight end alignments. Strat-O-Matic actually combines unbelievable coaching strategy with the amazing talents of 1000 NFL football players who perform according to their actual abilities. Both the stars and second stringers from all 28 NFL teams will pass, run, kick and play defense for you.

Each player's strengths and weaknesses are measured in STRAT-O-

MATIC. For example, if you have a quarterback who can't "cut the mustard deep", but throws great short patterns to his backs, that's precisely the way he will react in Strat-O-Matic. If you have that big back on your team who has trouble running outside but is a powerhouse straight ahead, that's the way he will be in Strat-O-Matic. Receivers, who have limitations going deep but are excellent at catching short and medium passes, perform the same way in Strat-O-Matic. Defenses also will react precisely the same in Strat-O-Matic. Kansas City, led by their fierce front four, will be devastating against both the run and the pass.

STRAT-O-MATIC IS 2 GAMES IN ONE

Coaching, individual player abilities and team concept are all blended into two electrifying creations - STRAT-O-MATIC ADVANCED AND SUPER ADVANCED FOOTBALL. BUT IF YOU PREFER A MUCH SIMPLER GAME WITH JUST PLAYER ABILITIES INVOLVED AND A MINIMAL AMOUNT OF STRATEGY - OUR BASIC VERSION IS FOR YOU. There is no need to purchase either version separately, as all game parts and instructions for both versions are included in our famous football game.

mentoring and a stay-in-school program. Brown was recently named its chairman of the board of directors. For each touchdown he scored in 1995, Brown donated $500 to the organization and Los Angeles' Jordan High School, where Willie Brown, the Raiders' director of squad development and one of Brown's fellow bowling partners on this particular day, once coached. Brown also has a miniature golf tournament to benefit Athletes & Entertainers for Kids and another golf tournament to raise money for the elderly and provide free day care.

When the Raiders made Brown their first-round draft pick (No. 6 overall) in 1988, he knew he eventually wanted to do something special for children. He does not have any children of his own but spends many weekends in the off-season taking his nieces and nephews on various activities around the Dallas area. "There's no limitation," says Brown's older brother Donald Kelly. "If they're out of diapers, he has them. You would imagine that he's their favorite uncle."

Brown, who turns 30 on July 22, says he wants to get married so he can have children while he's "relatively young."

"He says all of the time he's probably the only guy in the NFL that desires to get married," Kelly says. He has been dating the same woman the last two years and while he did not say he's ready for marriage, he did say, "I'm getting too old to keep this dating thing going." Kelly said it is not every woman who could date his brother. They have to understand what kind of person he is and shun the spotlight. Brown says his sweetheart is just like him.

"That's one of the requirements; in order to be with me you have to be as boring as I am," Brown says with a laugh.

And they must be into the family thing. While Brown says the best part of being a professional athlete is the money the worst is being away from his family in DeSoto, a Dallas suburb and his permanent residence.

Judging from how well Brown's career with the Raiders is going, it could be a while before he gets to spend as much time as he would like with his family. When his NFL career comes to an end, he already knows what avenues he would like to pursue. When he was injured in 1989 he started forming his company ProMoves, an athletic shoe and sports apparel company. It was incorporated in 1991 and by 1992 his shoes were in Foot Locker. About 10 to 15 players, including Marcus Allen, Steve Beuerlein and Spud Web of the NBA's Minnesota Timberwolves, have worn his shoes over the years. Kelly, president of ProMoves, predicts that his brother's business prospects after of football will surpass the ones before him now. In fact, Brown is already getting plenty of practice dealing with business men and women as a corporate spokesman for PLAYERS INC., the licensing and marketing subsidiary of the NFL Players Association.

"It is a very interesting opportunity for me to go out and meet a lot of corporate people and get my name in a different arena to help me with post-career stuff," Brown said.

Depending on how well his own company is doing in his post-NFL days, Brown could also see himself returning to Dallas' Woodrow Wilson High School, which he attended, and coaching football or pursuing a broadcasting career. Brown has been known to speak his mind but he wasn't always that way. Not that he didn't want to but a lisp prevented him from saying what he desired.

"I was nervous and scared and tired of being teased about it," said Brown, who corrected his problem through speech therapy after his rookie season. "I had to plan my words very carefully because I didn't want to say the words that I really had trouble with. So consequently I was a lot more quiet than I am now. Now that I know how to talk, I talk all of the time."

Except for when he bowls a strike.

UNSUNG HEROES HONORED AT NFL PLAYERS AWARDS BANQUET

BY DAWN RIDLEY

In a culmination of nationwide voting by players and fans, PLAYERS INC and the NFL Players Association honored 30 Unsung Heroes on March 8, 1996. The banquet, which benefited Special Olympics, was sponsored by Playoff, the trading card manufacturer that developed the concept in 1994. The now-familiar petition by Green Bay Packer John Jurkovic fans for a "Jurkovic" trading card inspired Playoff to create a set of trading cards to showcase football's "Unsung Heroes". The card set features NFL players who are not typically in the spotlight; these players are heroes both on the playing field and in their communities.

Voting for the 1996 Unsung Heroes was conducted on-line, through trading card publications, and by all thirty NFL teams. SportsLine USA, the Official On-line service of PLAYERS INC gathered votes from around the country through e-mail. One on-line vote for Wayne Chrebet of the New York Jets came from Christina Aniello of Brooklyn, New York who said, "He wasn't even supposed to make the team, but did and has played his heart out. He is truly an athlete that younger kids can look up to because he plays because of the love for the sport and not the love of money." One lucky Sportsline subscriber, Jason Ward, 19, of Oneonta, New York, won a trip to the NFL Players Awards banquet and a chance to meet his "Unsung Hero".

Krause Publications, another banquet sponsor, conducted voting through its trading card publications, Sports Collectors Digest and Sports Card Magazine. Fans from ages 7 to 70 had something to say about who they felt should be honored. "Kordell Stewart has been the Pittsburgh playmaker. He has come early to every game and has sat on the bench. He has made his share of magic on and off the field. GOOD JOB, KORDELL!" says Kiel Kauffeld, age 11 from Greentown, Pennsylvania.

Additionally, each player in the NFL had the opportunity to vote for the Unsung Hero on their team. The players see what goes on behind the scenes and are able to judge characteristics that fans and the media may not readily perceive. Many of the award winners noted that the recognition from their teammates was especially gratifying.

The banquet was an unqualified success, not only for the players and attendees, but also for Special Olympics. Over $200,000 was raised during the event, which will go to DC Special Olympics. The evening was hosted by ESPN's Roy Firestone, who entertained the group of 1,000 with his humorous commentary. Firestone was also on hand after the banquet to sign copies of his book, with all proceeds going to Special Olympics.

Each banquet attendee had a opportunity to rub shoulders with the likes of Bill Bates of the Dallas Cowboys and Bernie Parmalee of the Miami Dolphins at the cocktail party preceding the banquet. Fans and collectors had a chance to obtain autographs from their favorite players on the exclusive NFL Unsung Heroes Awards Banquet trading card sets. This set of 30 cards was presented in a black leather jewel box embossed with "Playoff Unsung Heroes, March 8, 1996" is a true collectors item. A slightly different card will be featured as an insert set in Playoff's 1996 Absolute and Prime trading card products.

Many of the players honored had never been featured on a trading card. "This is my first card. It really means a lot because the fans and players selected me," said Ray Brown of the Washington Redskins. These players toil on the gridiron, often without the accolades they deserve. They are important to their teams and their communities, and as Anne Selby, Director of Membership Services for the NFLPA and the coordinator of the banquet, said "They are just a fantastic group of guys."

RAY BROWN: unsung hero of the Washington Redskins.

An example of the dedication that is exemplified in these players is the journey of Sam Gash of the New England Patriots. When inclement weather prevented him from flying out of Logan airport in Boston, Gash hopped aboard a train for a 14 hour trip to Washington, DC. "I knew I had to get here", said Gash. "It was for a good cause."

INTERVIEW WITH RAY BROWN

We had the opportunity to speak with Ray Brown, an offensive lineman who has been with the Washington Redskins for seven seasons. Ray is heading to San Francisco to give the 49ers the strength and size that the Redskins have enjoyed for so long with Brown. Washington will miss this very sincere, giving man whose presence has been felt on and off the field.

DR: What did you think about the banquet?

RB: It was great! Not only did I have a good time, but were also helping an important charity. These events give players a chance to be involved with various organizations that they may not have been able to work with before.

DR: What about the trading card aspect of the event?

RB: I've never had a trading card before. This is my first card and it will always be special. People make a fuss over salaries and other issues, but trading cards are important to players. It's like a crowning moment in a player's life. I'm honored to be included in this group of guys.

DR: I can't believe you haven't been on a card.

RB: It's easy for an offensive lineman to be overlooked. We don't have any stats other than games started (Laughs). Usually it's the first round guys who are in the spotlight. You have a core group of players who will always be in card sets.

DR: How do you feel about leaving Washington?

RB: Well, it's been great. I think what I'll miss the most is the people - all the friends I've made in the last 7 years. I'm looking forward to making a contribution to the 49ers, though. I think it's a good opportunity to make a difference.

EUGENE ROBINSON: unsung hero of the Seattle Seahawks.

PLAYERS

You see them on the field every Sunday—but how well do you really know the men who make up the 30 NFL teams? Teams are divided into seven position groups—quarterback, running back, receiver, offensive line, defensive line, linebacker and secondary. Below are seven player profiles—one from each position group. See how much of a die-hard fan you really are by guessing each player's identity. Prizes will be awarded to the entries with the most correct answers. Grand prizes will be drawn from the pool of contestants who know six or more players.

QUARTERBACK

You may spot this QB decked out in Ralph Lauren or shooting pool at the local billiards hall. At home, he logs on the internet from his Macintosh computer. Some unsuspecting fans may have already chatted with him directly through America On Line. To keep in shape, he swims and also works out at a gym owned by one of his Offensive Linemen—but not until he's had his favorite breakfast of Lucky Charms cereal! He is also a supporter and contributor of the Boys and Girls Club of America.

- A) Steve Beuerlein, Carolina Panthers
- B) Drew Bledsoe, New England Patriots
- C) Jim Harbaugh, Indianapolis Colts

RUNNING BACK

He's a NASCAR enthusiast and fan of driver Dale Earnhardt. His hobbies are collecting sports memorabilia from all four major sports leagues and using his home computer. Off the field he sports a Rolex on his wrist, and on game day, Reeboks on his feet. Having a wide range of food tastes, his day may begin with a bowl of Fruity Pebbles and wind up with dinner at his favorite restaurant—Houstons. His musical interests are just as diverse, as he enjoys classical, R&B and oldies.

- A) Edgar Bennett, Green Bay Packers
- B) Emmitt Smith, Dallas Cowboys
- C) Thurman Thomas, Buffalo Bills

RECEIVER

This WR has some fascinating off the field interests. He's a fan of rap music, as well as a keyboard player. He frequently flies Northwest Airlines, where he is probably heading to the water for fishing or water sports. At home, he may chat on line through his IBM computer, or maybe shoot some pool or play a round of golf. He also enjoys cooking seafood and pasta.

- A) Robert Brooks, Green Bay Packers
- B) Sean Dawkins, Indianapolis Colts
- C) Mike Pritchard, Denver Broncos

OFFENSIVE LINEMAN

His daily ride is a Mustang convertible, but on weekends he can be seen tooling around in his classic '68 Impala convertible. He is a NASCAR fan, and his favorite driver is Rusty Wallace. His favorite cereal is Frosted Flakes. He collects football, baseball and basketball memorabilia, enjoys water sports and likes listening to oldies.

- A) Larry Allen, Dallas Cowboys
- B) Antone Davis, Philadelphia Eagles
- C) Bob Whitfield, Atlanta Falcons

DEFENSIVE LINEMAN

This big guys admits to loving Frosted Flakes. He may spend his free time fishing, skiing, golfing or on the water, but wherever he goes, he'll likely get there on American West Airlines. Also a fan of cooking, he claims he likes to cook just about anything. An interesting fact, he is one of a few players in the contest who's favorite video game is NOT Madden Football.

- A) D'Marco Farr, St. Louis Rams
- B) Dan Saleaumua, Kansas City Chiefs
- C) Dan Wilkinson, Cincinnati Bengals

LINEBACKER

This LB is a class act, sporting Armani sunglasses while cruising with the top down in his Mercedes Benz. When dining out, he likes a good steak at the Outback. But when cooking at home, his tastes head down south to Mexico. He may spend his weekends riding his bike or working out at the World Gym. But for relaxation, it's listening to jazz and collecting football memorabilia. Although this player owns a PC, he has yet to surf the internet.

- A) Cornelius Bennett, Atlanta Falcons;
- B) Seth Joyner, Arizona Cardinals
- C) Hardy Nickerson, Tampa Bay Buccaneers

SECONDARY

This guy likes his sleek sports cars. He owns a Trans Am and a Dodge Viper. When it comes to pro driving, he's a fan of NHRA drag racing and NASCAR — especially driver Jeff Gordon. An avid tennis player, he cools off after a game with a frosty root beer. On the field you'll see him wearing his Converse shoes and a Breathe Right Nasal Strip. After work, he listens to jazz and R&B, and also collects football and basketball memorabilia. He is very involved with charities to benefit sickle cell anemia.

- A) Eric Allen, New Orleans Saints
- B) Tim McDonald, San Francisco 49ers
- C) Bubba McDowell, Carolina Panther

Charlie Joiner

Hall of Fame

by JIM O'BRIEN

Practice, persistence, and patience, the three "Ps" for aspiring athletes and coaches, are part of the success stories of the Pro Football Hall of Fame's class of 1996.

All five inductees have something in common besides those how-to-succeed steps and a fierce competitive spirit. They started out on the other side of the ball from where they eventually achieved recognition and respect. It was when they switched from defense to offense, or vice versa, that they came into their own.

The 1996 class includes offensive linemen Dan Dierdorf of the St. Louis Cardinals and Lou Creekmur of the Detroit Lions, defensive back Mel Renfro of the Dallas Cowboys, receiver Charlie Joiner, who became a star with his third pro team, the San Diego Chargers, and Joe Gibbs, who coached the Washington Redskins to three victories in four Super Bowl appearances.

They will be inducted in ceremonies on the front steps of the Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio on Saturday, July 27. The ceremonies, open free to the public, are followed by the annual AFC-NFC Hall of Fame game, which this summer features the Indianapolis Colts and the New Orleans Saints.

Charlie Joiner

It took some time for Joiner to find himself in the NFL, starting out with as a defensive back with the Houston Oilers in 1969. He was traded to the Cincinnati Bengals in 1972, and came into his own during an 11-season stint (1976-1986) with the San Diego Chargers. He was a finalist for five years in the Hall of Fame voting. He is the latest of Eddie Robinson's great Grambling players to be so honored. "He taught you how to be responsible in the real world," Joiner said of Robinson.

At 5-11, 180, Joiner was on the small side for receivers, but no one ran his routes with more precision or was more sure-handed. "I was just another little guy running around catching passes," he said.

He played 18 seasons in the NFL, longer than any receiver in pro football history. When he retired in 1986 at age

J. McDONOUGH/NFL PHOTOS

39, he had caught more passes (750) for more yards (12,146) than any other player up to that time. Those marks were broken by Steve Largent of the Seattle Seahawks, who was inducted into the Hall of Fame in 1995.

Ernie Zampese, the Chargers' wide receivers coach late in Joiner's career, said: "They call him 'the Professional,' and he's just flat out one of the great receivers in NFL history. Without question, he was the finest technician, running routes and reading coverages."

Joiner was with the right team with the pass-happy Chargers during the days of quarterback Dan Fouts, offensive backfield coach Joe Gibbs, and head coach Don Coryell of "Air Coryell" fame.

"Gibbs was instrumental in making me the receiver I was," said Joiner. "If it wasn't for Joe Gibbs and Don Coryell, I may not be in the Hall of Fame."

Lou Creekmur

AP/WIDE WORLD

None of the new enshrinees had to be as patient as Creekmur to be chosen for the Hall of Fame. He was selected by the special Seniors committee that screens players overlooked in the normal voting process who merit further consideration. Creekmur was a tackle/guard on the Lions' three NFL championship teams in the 1950s, and according to one of his boosters, George Puskas of the Detroit Free Press, "was one of the great linemen in pro football history."

Creekmur was big for his day, at 6-4 and 255. He played 10 seasons, was All-Pro six times, and played in the first eight Pro Bowl games (1951-58). At 69, he lives in retirement in Plantation, Florida. Creekmur's bust may be a little different from the rest of this year's class. "If my nose looks off-center from certain angles," said Creekmur, "remember that in the early '50s, a lot of us were two-way players—offense and defense—and the face mask hadn't been invented yet."

A fast talking native of New Jersey, Creekmur had been an All-America at William & Mary, and also played on the defensive line when he first broke in with the Lions. He had an iron-man reputation when he went both ways.

"We had Bobby Layne and Doak Walker in the backfield," said Creekmur, "and on the line we had Vince Banon's, Dick Stanfel, Harley Sewell, me, Charlie Ane, Olie Spencer, and Gus Cifelli. On defense, we had Joe Schmidt, Les Bengaman, Dick Flanagan, John Prchlik, LaVern Torgeson, Thurman McGraw—what a group!"

To point up the difference in the approach to pro football in those days, consider that Creekmur was chosen to play in a ninth Pro Bowl, but missed the game because of a conflict with his off-season job in the Detroit trucking industry.

Dan Dierdorf

This honor is especially meaningful to Dierdorf, who grew up not far from the Hall of Fame. He went from Canton to Ann Arbor to play for Bump Elliott and Bo Schembechler at Michigan, where he played offense and defense as a freshman. As a rookie with the Cardinals, the 6-3, 290-pound Dierdorf was used at offensive tackle, guard, center, and even tight end in short-yardage situations.

Voted the best blocker by the NFL Players Association for three consecutive years (1976-78), Dierdorf anchored a line that led the NFC five straight years in fewest sacks allowed. He was named All-Pro five times, to the Pro Bowl six times, and to the league's Team of the Decade. He suffered a knee injury in 1979 and played his last four years virtually on one leg. He thought that might keep him out of the Hall of Fame.

After being a four-time finalist, Dierdorf was delighted by his selection. "I had reached the point where I didn't think it would happen," he admitted. "I thought I was going to be the Susan Lucci of Hall of Famers," a reference to the TV soap opera star and perennial Emmy nominee.

Dierdorf is the third native of Canton—after Marion Motley and Alan Page—to be enshrined. Like them, he came from a different period in pro football and has some old-fashioned ideas.

"I liked the days when a player didn't come out of the ball game," he said.

"Jim Brown's ethic of playing every down, never let him know how much you're hurt. I would love to see situational substitution done away with."

Joe Gibbs

"I remember when I first started out in coaching, I felt I'd be very fortunate if I could stay at the university level the rest of my life," Gibbs told reporters gathered in Phoenix for Super Bowl XXX, where the 1996 class was chosen. "Then, to end up with the Redskins, well, I never dreamed I'd get that much out of it."

What Gibbs got out of it were three Super Bowl victories in four appearances and a career record of 140-65 in 12 seasons (1981-92) at Washington. His 683 winning percentage is surpassed only by

CHARLES J. PERKINS/ABC

Vince Lombardi (740) and John Madden (731). He started out in the college ranks coaching defense, but came into his own on the offensive side. "My career in coaching was like a magic carpet ride," said Gibbs, now an NFL analyst and race car enthusiast.

Gibbs played at San Diego State under Don Coryell, whose staff he joined in 1964 after graduation. He was later a member of Coryell's staff with the Chargers. Gibbs measures lives by competitiveness and toughness. He believes that if you work hard enough, you will be rewarded. "Sports is the one environment left today where someone's got the hammer where there is discipline," said Gibbs. "I've always admired that aspect of sports."

He was known as a workaholic, a guy who spent three nights a week sleeping on a couch in his office. He showed up for work Monday morning with suitcase in hand and didn't leave the Redskins' complex to go home until Thursday night. Gibbs's team won Washington's first Super Bowl in the strike-shortened 1982 season, with a 27-17 victory over the Miami Dolphins in Pasadena. In 1983, his team broke the single-season league record for points (541) and again reached the Super Bowl, but lost 38-9 to the Raiders.

Mel Renfro

He was a swift and strong running back and national track star at the University of Oregon. He returned kickoffs and punts with great success when he joined Dallas, where he was converted to defensive back. He suspects it happened because Tom Landry was also the defensive coach when he joined the Cowboys in 1964.

"Landry took me aside and explained that he had Frank Clarke as receiver and had just made trades for Buddy Dial and Tommy McDonald," said Renfro. "He didn't want me to sit on the bench, so he planned to use me at safety until there was an opening on offense."

Renfro excelled at safety for six seasons and at cornerback for eight during his 14-year career with the Cowboys. "I guess I made one fat mistake," said Renfro. "I played defense too well." He was selected to the Pro Bowl each of his first 10 seasons. He led the NFL with 10 interceptions in 1969. He ranked 16th in career interceptions and 12th in kickoff returns.

When he retired after the 1977 season, Renfro reflected on his career, and had one criticism. "I wish they had let me carry the ball," he said. "I liked making All-Pro at cornerback, but I really hated to play it. It was the loneliest job." When he learned that he had been selected to the Hall of Fame, he might have had second thoughts. "It absolutely couldn't have been a better ending to a story if someone had written a book or made a movie about it. I'm just thrilled. This is monumental, fantastic. I had to pinch myself to see if I were dreaming." □

Hidden Gems

by Larry Weisman USA TODAY

The scout runs the same piece of tape back and forth back and forth. He's looking at the right tackle—or at least he was. A big kid. Good drive blocker. Fair feet. Not much with the hands. But who's that guy next to him?

As the scout scans the film staring ever more intently, he finds himself enamored of this spunky guard. A little short to be a top pick, maybe not as quick as the best of them. But he's always finishing his blocks, always competing, and the scout makes a note that this young man bears watching in the later rounds.

The tackle? He's a bust, a first-round pick who can't play at the NFL level. A failure almost from the opening day of camp through his journeys to a couple more clubs over eight forgettable seasons. Always gets another look because once he was a No. 1, but he never makes it big.

And that guard? Picked in the fifth round, he fought his way through camp and made the last cut. Played on special teams. Got in the lineup and then never came out after a very average regular season. Twisted a knee. Pro Bowl? He'd have to pay to go. Good player? Sure. He's still a little short on size and quickness. But he's a solid pro, still finishing his blocks and making a very nice living.

What happened? How did the pedigreed stud collapse and die when the no-name beside him began to peak? Answer those questions, the equivalents of building a better mousetrap, and NFL personnel wizards will beat a path to your door.

"Development is the biggest thing and the toughest to call," claims Buffalo general manager John Butler, who selected running back Danick Holmes in the seventh round of last year's draft. Holmes rushed for 698 yards (4.1 average) and four touchdowns in providing a change of pace from perennial Pro Bowler Thurman Thomas and bearing out Butler's basic philosophy through the draft. "The same criteria go into each round. You take the best player. And if you do that, you shouldn't be too surprised at what they do," Butler says.

Call them lunch-pail guys or overachievers, but don't for a minute ignore these unheralded players who explode into competence, if not stardom, with regularity.

Larry Brown

Who wasn't shocked when Larry Brown, among Dallas's glittering stars, stepped up and made the two key plays of the Super Bowl and earned Most Valuable Player honors? Go figure. Brown, a 12th-round pick in 1991, eclipsing the likes of Troy Aikman, Emmitt Smith, Michael Irvin, and Charles Haley.

As a junior college transfer to Texas Christian University, Brown showed a disdain for attending class that briefly led to his separation from the team. After an erratic senior year, he excelled in the Blue-Gray game and impressed scouts with his speed.

So the Cowboys took a chance. As did Brown. He skipped a week of training camp due to a family emergency, hardly a way to endear oneself to Jimmy Johnson. Then he got serious and chewed up fellow rookie (and second-round choice) Alvin Harper practice after practice. By the fourth game, Brown became a starter. "I think they liked that I was determined and a hard worker," Brown said.

The effort paid dividends in 1995. Brown had a big interception in the NFC championship against Green Bay and two that led to touchdowns against Pittsburgh in the Super Bowl. Never mind the reports that he was out of position on both Dallas needed plays. The 12th-round pick made them.

So how come no one saw this in him five years ago?

"He's definitely an overachiever," said University of Minnesota coach Jim Wacker, who recruited Brown to TCU. "He has a good temperament and perspective. Some guys get hyped up too much, built up to be Superman when they're not. Then there are guys like Larry Brown. It's neat in coaching to see that the NFL needs those guys, those stabilizers who are not going to be prima donnas but team guys."

Hey, it could also be part of Dallas's karma. The Cowboys found defensive backs Cliff Harris, Everson Walls, and Bill Bates as free agents, though Bates likes to joke he was a "13th-round" selection in a 12-round draft. Job security never comes easy for those surprises. As Wacker noted, the Cowboys "were trying to find someone to replace Larry Brown since he got there."

Well, they're still looking. Brown, coming off his super Super Bowl, signed a five-year contract with Oakland that averages $2.5 million per year. Dallas, strapped by the salary cap, couldn't have signed him if it had wanted to.

J. B. Brown

Funny, but two years before Larry Brown debuted in the NFL, and at roughly the same point in the 12th round, Miami drafted a cornerback named J.B. Brown. Though the Maryland program J.B. Brown played in was fairly high-profile, one AFC East personnel director acknowledged never having even heard of Brown in the weeks before the draft. Yet a year later, J.B. Brown made his first start and hasn't been out of the lineup since. The higher-profile defensive backs—Louis Oliver, Jarvis Williams, Troy Vincent—came and went. J.B. Brown soldiers on, unknown.

Dwayne Harper

Same M.O. for San Diego's Dwayne Harper. Seattle chose him in the 11th round in 1988, the 299th player selected overall. He found his way into the starting lineup in his second season and eventually defected as a free agent to the Chargers, for whom he has seven interceptions the last two years.

No question every club craves this sort of player in the draft: a young guy on the front end of the learning curve and the short end of the pay scale.

Lee Woodall

Had the Philadelphia Eagles looked under their noses, they might have eyeballed that husky security guard at their training camp in West Chester, PA. They might have asked a question such as, "How come the lights are on late in the evening in the gym when no one's around?"

They would have found that this night watchman played safety and fullback at West Chester University. A little undersized, perhaps, for an NFL program, but those long nights pumping Eagles iron in the gym turned Lee Woodall, a small-college two-way player, into a strongside linebacker who won a Super Bowl ring as a rookie with San Francisco and went to the Pro Bowl in his second season. Not bad for a former hired hand, who never forgets the stifling blanket of obscurity at those sweltering training camps.

It's a strange circle of events and people that surround Woodall. The Eagles, who needed a linebacker, traded with San Francisco for Bill Romanowski. The 49ers then took Woodall in the sixth round in 1994. Their defensive coordinator at the time: Ray Rhodes, now the Eagles' coach.

Washington also should have followed Woodall more closely. A native of Carlisle, PA, the Redskins' summer home until 1995, Woodall got a pep talk from Washington cornerback Darrell Green when he quit West Chester after his freshman year. Woodall went back to school and earned a scholarship and Division II All-America honors. "It must have meant more to him than I thought it did," Green said of that casual conversation.

Jeff Blake

Jeff Blake sat on the New York Jets' bench without a hope of sniffing playing time. Backing up Boomer Esiason and Browning Nagle, he held a firm grasp on the No. 3 slot after the Jets picked him in the sixth round out of East Carolina. He played little and seemed an unknown quantity. So the Jets waived him in the last cut in 1994 and let him toddle off to Cincinnati, where (surprise, surprise) offensive coordinator Bruce Coslet, the Jets' former coach, welcomed him warmly. Before long, Blake was calling signals and David Klingler, a No. 1 pick (fifth overall), was holding the clipboard on the sidelines.

Blake led the AFC in touchdown passes in 1995 (28) and completions (326) threw the AFC's longest scoring pass (88 yards) and was second in passing yards (3,822). When he broke into the lineup in 1994, the Bengals were 0-7 and had just lost Klingler and backup Donald Hollas to injuries. Blake made his first start against Dallas, threw touchdown passes of 67 and 55 yards, and gave his stumbling club a quick 14-0 lead against the Cowboys. They lost, 23-20, but Blake established himself in one outing and the Bengals broke their losing streak the following week.

Wayne Chrebet

But let's not be too hard on the Jets. They saw something in a scrappy little receiver playing at Hofstra University, on whose Hempstead, NY, campus they practice. And it couldn't have been too difficult to get a recommendation on Wayne Chrebet because the Hofstra coach, Joe Gardi, once was a Jets' assistant.

Chrebet caught 57 passes for 1,200 yards and 16 touchdowns (a school record) in the Flying Dutchmen's run-and-shoot offense, and the receiver-poor Jets signed him as a free agent. Result: The 5-10, 180-pound Chrebet caught 66 passes—tops among NFL rookies last season—for 726 yards and four touchdowns.

Curtis Martin

Topping the AFC rushers last year was New England's Curtis Martin, a third-round pick of questionable durability during his short stay at the University of Pittsburgh. But Martin, the 10th running back taken and the 74th pick last spring, bought into Patriots coach Bill Parcells's workhorse theories and rumbled for 1,487 yards a year ago.

Terrell Davis

Terrell Davis, a sixth-round choice, knocked off a bunch of journeymen, emerged as Denver's go-to guy, and rushed for 1,117 yards. The Broncos' offense prospered in part because of second-year center Tom Nalen (seventh round) and tight end Shannon Sharpe (seventh round).

Chris Warren

Of course, the AFC's big dog at running back remains Seattle's Chris Warren, himself a fourth-round pick from that football factory called Ferrum College in southern Virginia. The conference's leading rusher in '94 (1,545 yards), Warren was the runner-up (1,346 yards) to Martin last fall and finished second in scoring among non-kickers to Carl Pickens with 16 touchdowns.

Bryce Paup

Unearthed in middle to late rounds, if at all, these diamonds in the rough improve with polishing. Green Bay spent a meager sixth-round pick in 1990 on linebacker Bryce Paup, who, in his first season with Buffalo as a big-dollar free agent, led the NFL with 17 1/2 sacks. He was good playing behind the Packers' Reggie White, even better lined up outside the Bills' Phil Hansen (and opposite Bruce Smith).

Brian Mitchell

Washington's Brian Mitchell holds 12 club records, setting seven of them last season. He has played running back and quarterback in addition to the punt and kick-return duties for which he's best known, and he led the NFL the last two seasons in all-purpose yards.

That's a lot of value for a fifth-round pick in 1990. Six career punt returns for touchdowns tie him for second on the NFL's all-time list. He was second on the Redskins last year in rushing and receiving and led the NFC in kickoff returns (25.6-yard average). He scored by rushing, receiving, and on a punt return.

"People can say I'm a return specialist, but I line up in the backfield, I run the ball, and I catch the ball out of the backfield," Mitchell said. "I guarantee one thing: When I do line up back there, the defense isn't saying, 'O.K., we've got a return specialist back there.'"

Just ask the Broncos. Mitchell put up 290 combined yards against them last season, including a 36-yard touchdown run, a 59-yard punt return, and a 52-yard kickoff return. "He can do so much," said Redskins coach Norv Turner. "Our biggest concern is not to overwork him."

Imagine that. Turner worries about the welfare of a fifth-round pick. Turnabout is certainly fair play. Later choices, such as Mitchell, rarely get the opportunity to make the mistakes a team forgives in a No. 1. They must overachieve from the first day of practice through the last game they play, not exactly stigmatized by their draft status but never considered thoroughbreds. Heart and an unquenchable desire often separate them from the blue-bloods given a pass to the top.

Nate Newton

Dallas guard Nate Newton started his career in the USFL with the Tampa Bay Bandits and then scrapped to keep his job with the Cowboys in Jimmy Johnson's early days of constant roster churning. He lets that motivate him still. "I came in once and there were seven guys in my locker. It was a revolving door. It was intimidation in a big way," Newton said.

The lesson? "You never want to lose. That's one of the few things I learned when got to this level," he explained. "My only goal is to win. I made friends along the way and made enemies along the way. I don't care if Troy Aikman, Emmitt Smith, and Michael Irvin don't like me. If they go out there on Sundays and we win, then I love them."

For the nobody-turned-somebody, it's lonely at the top. And lonelier at the bottom. □

Dave Black

ALL-TIME SLEEPER TEAM

With the NFL draft now a relatively tidy affair at seven rounds, fans today forget that the college selection meeting once went 27 rounds and cast its net in all sorts of directions. Things were less complicated in those days. As New York Giants co-owner Wellington Mara remembers it, the Street & Smith's College Football preview issue ultimately served as the draft guide. Combine workouts, individual timing and testing, psychological workups—that all came later as the NFL advanced to a more businesslike stage. "Those were very different times," Mara said. "The draft was not exactly science."

As might be expected, most of those very late picks never distinguished themselves. Hey, you don't go in the 27th round and become a star, do you? Well, Roosevelt Brown enjoyed just that distinction. The Giants selected him 27th in 1953. The big tackle from Morgan State played 13 seasons and was elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1975. No player drafted lower elevated himself more, as Brown is the latest-round pick to be enshrined.

The Hall of Fame also counts among its members six players who were signed as free agents, among them Oakland cornerback Willie Brown and Miami center Jim Langer. Great ones, it seems, can come from anywhere. So here are our offensive and defensive lineups of all-time standouts from the deepest of back-grounds. No No. 1 or No. 2 picks allowed. Players picked the lowest get the highest priority for this all-star collection.

Many of these players were cut by their drafting team and went on to achieve as free agents with other clubs. Johnny Unitas, for instance, was Pittsburgh's No. 9 pick in 1955, got cut, and played brilliantly for the Baltimore Colts.

For NFL coaches, winning is no longer enough to ensure job security

by DON PIERSON CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Don Shula called it the "toughest" season of his 33-year NFL coaching career. Boored by fans and chastised by the media, the winningest coach in pro football history was pressured to resign graciously from the Miami Dolphins after a 9-7 record last year, another ho-hum winning playoff-bound season. He became the first coach run out of town on his own expressway. A section of highway in Miami is named after him.

Winning used to be the only thing, according to the legend of Vince Lombardi. Now, it's only one of many things, and obviously not enough to ensure job security in a profession that never did have any guarantees.

Barry Switzer was ridiculed and second-guessed before, during and after a winning Super Bowl season. His Dallas Cowboys couldn't beat the San Francisco 49ers or the Washington Redskins. He should have punted against the Philadelphia Eagles. He couldn't get along with his quarterback.

"The good news is we won the Super Bowl, the bad news is I'm coming back," Switzer said, defiantly.

Ted Marchibroda got his surprising Indianapolis Colts into the AFC championship game against the Pittsburgh Steelers, missing a Super Bowl trip by the tip of a football falling to the end zone ground. His reward for exceeding anything Indianapolis had ever seen in pro football? An offer of a one-year contract at no raise. Thanks but no thanks, Marchibroda said, and replaced Bill Belichick as coach of the new Baltimore team.

Jim Mora is now the NFL's reigning head coach. His 10 years with the New Orleans Saints makes him No. 1 in tenure with one club. His recognition for surviving so long? He gets one more year, win or else.

"It's almost impossible to stay with the same team 10 or 11 years anymore," Mora said. "There is definitely more pressure. It's so much different from 10 years ago it's not even close."

What's different is the size of the magnifying glass. Exposure and scrutiny have increased so much that the intensity of the glare can microwave a coach in a shorter span than ever before. The seat was always hot, now you can't even sit on it.

Wayne Fontes had to make the playoffs last year or else. So Detroit won its last seven games. After the Lions lost their playoff opener, the hounds were at his heels again. Now he must advance farther into the playoffs to stay employed.

The subject of job pressure came up more than once when NFL coaches met during the owners' annual meeting in Palm Beach last March. Dave Wannstedt of the Chicago Bears, a coach who has enjoyed a three-year honeymoon, got a glimpse of the future in the last game of his 1995 season when the Bears beat the Eagles to stay alive for the playoffs. The Bears had been playing all season with the specter of moving to a new stadium in Gary, Indiana literally hanging over their heads. Cringing Soldier Field were airplanes trailing nasty suggestions for club president Michael McCaskey.

"What are those fans thinking the first time we drop a pass?" Wannstedt said.

"Fire the coach in Detroit," answered Fontes, overhearing Wannstedt's lament.

To Kansas City Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer, the pressure is no different than it ever was. "I don't feel any more pressure to win now than I did throughout my career, probably because the pressure to win I have is not driven by outsiders or external forces," Schottenheimer said.

A first-round playoff loser after a league-best 13-3 regular season, Schottenheimer admits he doesn't listen to talk radio and couldn't say how many sports talk shows air in Kansas City

"Maybe I isolate myself from the rest of what goes on," said Schottenheimer, who is aware of pressure elsewhere. "The thing that amazed me was all the suggestions a year ago that had George Seifert not gone to the Super Bowl with the 49ers, he'd be out of work. That's hard to imagine," Schottenheimer said

Pressure Points

The boom in sports-talk radio is one of several manifestations of increased pressure

- New owners who have spent their last millions on their teams and demand instant and constant accountability
 - Free agency, which encourages a get-well-quick expectation that isn't necessarily realistic
 - Salaries so high that the empathy gap between player and fan is wider than ever
 - More suspicion than loyalty driving the passions of fans, who see spiraling costs and franchise free agency and are more inclined toward resentment than patience
 - Rules that promote close games, making it appear that everybody has a chance. Therefore, winning looks easier, rather than harder, than ever
 - Greater media scrutiny. With the increase in cable TV, there are often more minicams than notebooks recording and replaying every move football teams make
- In every case, the head coach remains the most obvious, most convenient, and most vulnerable target of criticism. Their accountability has stretched beyond preparation and strategy to player behavior and salary caps and owner maneuvering. When a player pouts or an owner threatens to move out of an old stadium, the coach is the man at the microphone every day, fielding questions he often cannot answer

A closer look at the burdens

Wayne Fontes

Talk Radio

"I've had people in the league say, 'Don't listen to them' but that's not a problem because I never do," Schottenheimer said. "When I'm going to work, I either have a CD playing or a phone conversation going."

In Miami, a radio station is being sued for mimicking the "Bryan Cox Show," imitating linebacker Cox's voice making outrageous and personal statements that drove Cox's children home crying from school. The most surprising thing is the radio station is the Dolphins' flagship station.

"In New Orleans, we have a brutal guy who has made his reputation on bashing the Saints," Mora said. "He has a small group of callers, and the Saints can't do anything right."

Talk radio is riding a wave of popularity. Anybody with a car phone is recognized as an expert. What boosts the credibility of the stations is the willingness of so many athletes and coaches to contribute. They help make their own bed.

Owners

Philadelphia Eagles owner Jeff Lurie borrowed every penny of the $185 million he used to buy the Eagles. He needs results in order to keep selling tickets. To get results, he needs players. To get players, he needs cash to pay the going rate on signing bonuses. He has very little cash compared with Jerry Jones of the Cowboys, who supplemented the income he derives from owning Texas Stadium with marketing deals with Nike and Pepsi that got him sued for $300 million by fellow owners.

This vicious cycle turns coaches around in circles. A coach can make no mistake in personnel, no mistake in strategy. The problem is not limited to new owners who paid dearly for their franchises. Art Modell couldn't make money in the hotbed of Cleveland football because of poor business decisions and an unfavorable stadium situation. One reason he borrowed money to pay free agent Andre Rison's signing bonus was to stem the defection of luxury suite owners.

"I ran out of the capacity to borrow and to be competitive," Modell said. "I can make a good buck for a year by being 2-14. But the next year, my season ticket base of 38,000 would go to 18,000. Then what?"

Then Bill Belichick gets blamed. After he was released as head coach, team officials said one reason was his inability to rally the troops after Modell's decision to move to Baltimore leaked out.

"It's such big business," said Packers coach Mike Holmgren. "We've got pressure on coaches to make it happen, to fill the stadium. I think those things have intensified over the last 10 years."

Free Agency

The Dolphins spent millions to assemble a team with 19 former No. 1 draft choices last year. They put all their egos in one basket for Shula to make one last run at glory. The 9-7 result simply wasn't good enough.

Buddy Ryan wrote checks with his mouth that his free agents couldn't cash in Arizona. Ex-Eagles Seth Joyner and Clyde Simmons and quarterback David Krieg couldn't produce the "winner in town" that Ryan promised. So he was kicked out of town.

Entering the fourth season of free agency, the only free agent who has proved worth the money is Deion Sanders, who won a Super Bowl title when he jumped to the 49ers and another one when he jumped to the Cowboys. If you argue that Sanders was only another star along for joy rides on two great teams—not an impossible argument—then you certainly can't name another free agent who has delivered his team to the promised land.

"It's still a team sport," said Indianapolis Colts director of operations Bill Tobin.

The salary cap prevents teams from either keeping all the players they want or from loading up on other stars. It is another built-in protection to maintain competitive balance. But fans see it as a panacea, a way for weak teams to correct all ills with a few signatures on big paychecks. If that's true, the Cowboys will fall to 3-13 this year and New York Jets will win the Super Bowl.

"Free agency is just another thing for the media to write about and criticize and focus on a team not doing the job. It just makes it harder," Mora said.

Salaries

Ron Stone started two games for the Cowboys in three years. He played guard and tackle mostly on the kicking teams. Yet the New York Giants paid him $10 million over five years to jump to their team this season.

Troy Auzenne played fewer than 60 snaps for the Bears last year, yet the Colts paid him a $1 million bonus to play left tackle for them.

Cowboy linebackers Dixon Edwards and Robert Jones got contracts of $10 million to jump to the Minnesota Vikings and St. Louis Rams, respectively. Edwards for four years, Jones for five. Just think if they played on third down! The Vikings claim Edwards will, but he didn't in Dallas.

The average salary of an NFL player was reported at $714,000 by the NFL Players Association last year. It will get even closer to $1 million this year. Fans, therefore, expect million-dollar performance.

When they don't get it, they are as apt to blame the coach as the player.

"Herman Moore made a great catch in a game and the fans were yelling 'Way to go, Herman!'" Fontes said. "Thirty seconds later, he comes across and drops a routine ball. I hear 'Fire the coach!'"

"My wife and I went to an ice skating competition. A girl jumps up and does a triple axel. The people applaud. It was beautiful. Then she tries another triple and falls. She gets up and the crowd goes 'Oooooohhh.' But no one booed. I said to my wife, 'I wonder if her coach will get fired.'"

The Loyalty Factor

"Everybody's looking for a better deal," Wannstedt said. Owners look for better cities. Coaches look for better players. Players look for more money. Fans pay.

"From the fans' perspective, it makes them think, 'Are these guys really loyal to me? Am I going to be loyal to them in bad times? It's a little bit shaky right now,'" Wannstedt said.

In Miami, Shula left Joe Robbie Stadium to chants of "Jimmy Jimmy Jimmy," as in Johnson. The winningest coach in history heard them, but reacted with typical class. "The responsibility always stops with the head coach," Shula said. "I'm aware of the criticism that's out there. But I can't let it take away from my focus and my responsibility to get this team ready to play."

On the Johnson camaraderie specifically, Shula said, "That's something I can't control. I've also got a lot of loyal fans that have been with me through the years. They've stuck with me and I appreciate that. The other ones are entitled to their opinion. They can say and think what they feel. That can't have an influence on me and my responsibilities. I can't let that influence it."

Rules

Obsessed with competitive balance, NFL rules committees tinker with every tool at their disposal to prevent lopsided games. From the draft to the salary cap to the waiver wire to compensatory draft picks to pass blocking rules to illegal chucking to hands-off quarterbacks, the system is fine-tuned to promote the results it enjoys: a record number of overtime games (21) last year. A total of 51 games (21.3 percent) were decided after the two-minute warning.

The result is every team appears so evenly matched that the perception is a good coach can make the difference. But no matter how hard the league tries, it can not legislate intelligence or outlaw stupidity. The truth is, only eight teams have won 26 of the 30 Super Bowls: the Cowboys, 49ers, Steelers, Raiders, Redskins, Dolphins, Giants, and Packers.

Media Scrutiny

The weekly rhythm of pro football sets it apart from other sports. A limited number of games make each game more important and therefore more interesting. In basketball or baseball, a loss is another day at the office. In football, it's a crisis in the office. The NFL becomes a victim of its own popularity. With a week to build up to games and a week to dissect them, a coach is on the spot far longer than 60 minutes.

"It's one of the very few sports where everybody thinks they know more than the coach," Fontes said.

Especially ex-coaches. When Switzer sent Emmitt Smith on fourth and a foot twice on failed plunges against the Eagles, he was immediately second-guessed by network experts Joe Gibbs, Jimmy Johnson, and Mike Ditka, who called it "dumb and dumber." Lost in the debate was Switzer's decision to second-guess himself. By going for it twice, he obviously knew exactly what he was doing. Wrong or not, it reflected a leadership and confidence receiver Michael Irvin said the team needed at that point to propel them onward.

"I've been in this business 35 years and I know what I can do," Switzer said. "What do I care what other people think?"

But when it's quarterback Troy Aikman thinking his coach didn't back him up against insinuations of racism by former assistant coach John Blake, then the coach must care. Aikman's agent Leigh Steinberg called Switzer's handling of a potentially explosive situation "outrageous" and "irresponsible." If Switzer remains on the spot in 1996, it's partly of his own doing.

Pressure on coaches is nothing new and never will disappear. It's part of the deal, and every coach knows.

"In San Francisco one year [1990], we were 15-2 and we didn't have a whole lot of fun coaching because if you didn't win the Super Bowl, nothing else mattered," Holmgren said. "None of us got into coaching originally for that. We got in to teach guys, to see a progression during the week where you get a team ready to pay, to see young people get better. As long as I'm doing what I'm doing, I'm going to attempt to have fun doing it."

"I still like it," Mora said. "The pressure I put on myself hasn't changed a bit. You've got to not let those outside distractions worry you. It's still challenging and fun. We are all competitive guys. This is a big year for me, and I welcome the challenge. I'm looking forward to it. You just keep fighting and do the best you can and try to win." □

"Free agency hurts the team losing the player more than it helps the team signing him."

FREE AGENT SCORECARD

by Larry Felser BUFFALO NEWS

Last January, as the Miami Dolphins were surging down the playoff drain, Tom Heckert, then the team's vice president of player personnel, observed that "Maybe we should pay more attention to team chemistry." That would have been a more helpful observation for Don Shula if it had been spoken two years earlier. In fact, after three years of misfiring on free agency, it may become the mantra of most teams. The NFL landscape is littered with casualties of the open market. Consider some of them:

Bad Moon Rising

Art Modell decided he couldn't live without a g-t-edged wide receiver for Vinny Testaverde last year, so he spent $17 million, most of which the Browns did not have on hand, for Andre Rison. Atlanta's troubled pass catcher, wherever Rison had played (Indianapolis and Atlanta), he always seemed to finish each season with impressive numbers. His name was always mentioned with the league's elite wide receivers.

There was another constant in Rison's résumé: His teams almost never qualified for the playoffs. The one time the Falcons did, they exited immediately. Cleveland was supposed to be different. Rison was coming to a team that had finished 11-5 the season before. The Browns knocked off New England in the playoffs before being eliminated themselves. Even after they lost to Pittsburgh, they were spoken of as "next year's AFC champions." What followed was the free-agent signing from hell!

Cleveland made room for Rison by trading Eric Metcalf, who had long-distance scoring plays of 92, 73, 57, and 37 yards in 1994, to Atlanta, along with their own first-round draft choice, for the Falcons' first-round pick, the 10th in the first round. When it came time to redeem the selection, the Browns panicked when their target, Penn State tight end Kyle Brady, was chosen by the Jets one position before they were to draft. Cleveland ended up dealing the Atlanta slot to San Francisco for the 49ers first-round selection, which was 20 picks later in the round. The Browns ended up picking linebacker Craig Powell, whose contributions were insignificant.

Once the season began, the Browns staggered out of the gate, a development made all the more embarrassing because Rison was just another player in their offense. The Browns couldn't find a way to get the ball to him. Coach Bill Belichick made a psychological error by benching Testaverde in favor of rookie Eric Zeier. The move eroded team confidence and eventually was one of the factors which cost Belichick his job.

The Browns were already in a losing pit when Modell announced he would move the franchise to Baltimore in 1996. When things went bad, Rison's lack of production and whining because he wasn't getting the ball enough exacerbated the problem. Meanwhile, in Atlanta, Metcalf contributed heavily to the Falcons' successful march to the playoffs. No one missed Rison.

Often it happens the other way. Detroit paid a fortune for defensive tackle Henry Thomas of Minnesota a year ago, but he wasn't much help when the Philadelphia Eagles ran the Lions out of the playoffs. 58-37. Without Thomas, the Vikings didn't even make the playoffs. Bill Parcells was hailed for a brilliant move when he signed his old handyman, Dave Meggett, for New England. With Meggett in the lineup the Patriots dropped right out of the playoff race early. Without Meggett the Giants slid from 9-7 to 5-11.

The Buddy System

Buddy Ryan thought he was importing the old Philadelphia Eagles' truculence to his Arizona defense when he signed linebacker Seth Joyner and end Clyde Simmons. It turned out the Cardinals inherited the meek. Without their old stars the Eagles molted until Ray Rhodes rebuilt them in his own image last year. When Denver signed Pro Bowl wide receiver Anthony Miller from San Diego, the Broncos thought they were back in the Super Bowl hunt. It turned out they were merely treading water. Without Miller the Charger passing game drooped.

"Free agency," says Marv Levy, Buffalo's sage coach, "usually hurts the team losing the player more than it helps the team signing the player."

George Young, the New York Giants' long-time general manager, takes an even more skeptical view of the process. "The free-agent system," said Young, "has gotten to be almost an accumulation of trophies. Everyone evaluates your manhood based on how many free agents you sign. One day somebody's going to write a very detailed article about what is really going on in free agency. Nobody seems to know that some of the big names do not play like big names anymore."

Young was forced into the free-agent market last winter in order to retain one of his own players. The San Francisco 49ers offered running back Rodney Hampton $16.45 million over six years, which Young matched, thereby keeping the Giants' all-time leading rusher (5,989 yards).

interested in having a lot of opinions. I want guys who want to work, and who want to do whatever it takes to win. You might say I want guys with blind loyalty."

During the first three weeks of free agency in 1996, three Miami defensive starters—linebacker Bryan Cox, cornerback Troy Vincent, and pass rusher Marco Coleman—decided their loyalties, blind or otherwise, weren't with J.J. Cox signed with Chicago, Vincent with Philadelphia, and Coleman with San Diego. Only the departure of Vincent saddened Johnson.

The Salary Cap

In many respects, free agency and the strictures of the salary cap contributed to the downfall of Shula, the most victorious coach in NFL history. After the Dolphins signed Eric Green, the huge tight end from the Steelers, Miami became the popular favorite to win the AFC championship. The assumption was that the big guy would become Dan Marino's go-to receiver in the red zone. As it turned out, Green missed 39 practices. His large signing bonus and fat contract produced amnesty for those violations.

Meanwhile, safety Gene Atkins became a one-man insurrection. He attacked a mons. It turned out the Cardinals inherited the meek. Without their old stars the Eagles molted until Ray Rhodes rebuilt them in his own image last year. When Denver signed Pro Bowl wide receiver Anthony Miller from San Diego, the Broncos thought they were back in the Super Bowl hunt. It turned out they were merely treading water. Without Miller the Charger passing game drooped.

"Free agency," says Marv Levy, Buffalo's sage coach, "usually hurts the team losing the player more than it helps the team signing the player."

George Young, the New York Giants' long-time general manager, takes an even

Blind Loyalty

When Jimmy Johnson replaced Shula in Miami, the expectation was that he would pursue some of his former stars at Dallas as well as the best the free agent market had to offer during the winter of '95. He didn't see it that way at all.

"Any time you bring a veteran in," said Johnson, "you're going to have a guy who's been through the rigors of pro football, and who's going to have an opinion on how you do things. When you bring in a college player, he doesn't have any opinions since it's his first exposure to professional football. I'm not sportswriter. He stormed out of a team meeting. Shula probably wanted to dump Atkins, but if that had happened a large portion of his contract would have been dumped on the 1995 salary cap, forcing the release of two more players.

Negative behavior was rewarded in other ways. Cox, the fiery linebacker, was uncontrollable at times, taking 150 yards in penalties for unsportsmanlike conduct during his time in Miami and rampaging on the sidelines to the distraction of his teammates. Shula was reluctant to discipline him since Cox was to become a free agent at the end of the season, and the coach deemed him too valuable to lose. In the end, Shula was the casualty, and Cox signed with the Chicago Bears.

The Cox signing represents another aspect of free agency desperation. Despite Cox's unruly past, the Bears signed him to a $3.3 million package. They missed the playoffs last year after having been swept by their chief AFC Central rivals, Green Bay and Detroit. Dave Wannstedt came to Chicago from Dallas as a defensive whiz. His first Bears team yielded just 230 points, his second 307, and last year's edition 360. Opponents scored 27 points or more in seven games. Only two other NFC teams gave up more points for the season. Wannstedt is gambling Cox will help to change all that.

High Profile

There is a profile emerging for the most desirable signees: a player 25-26 years old with four years experience, mostly as a starter, and whose health profile projects at least five more years left in his career. Cornelius Bennett may still be the best coverage linebacker in the NFL, and his athleticism allows a defensive coordinator to use him in a variety of ways. He doesn't, however, match up to the profile. He is 31 and has nine years of NFL wear and tear in his background. Buffalo still liked him, but not $5 million worth, which was the signing bonus he was seeking.

Bill Polian, the Carolina GM, swung the famous three-way trade among Indianapolis and the Rams, which brought Bennett to the Bills when Polian was Buffalo's GM. Yet Polian and the Panthers also passed Atlanta with a defense that ranked last in the NFC, paid the $5 million.

Free agency and its pilot fish, the salary cap, were designed to even out the competition in the NFL. It hasn't turned out that way yet. Teams such as Dallas, San Francisco, and Buffalo sustained losses yet managed to find ways to remain serious contenders. Free agency just emerged from its fourth market. Eventually, even the best teams will be hurt by erosion.

The Cowboy Way

The Cowboys lost 20 players during the first three free-agency periods. They included starters such as center Mark Stepnoski, linebacker Ken Norton Jr., wide receiver Alvin Harper, defensive tackle Tony Casillas, and kicker Eddie Murray. Also lost were such important role players as quarterbacks Rodney Peete and Bernie Kosar, defensive back James Washington, defensive linemen Jim Jeffcoat and Jimmie Jones, wide receiver/kick returner Kelvin Martin, and offensive linemen Kevin Gogan and John Geseke.

Free agency '96 wasn't a month old when four defensive starters from the defending Super Bowl champions departed, including cornerback Larry Brown, Super Bowl XXX's Most Valuable Player. The others were linebackers Dixon Edwards and Robert Jones and tackle Russell Maryland. Brown and Maryland signed with the Raiders, Edwards with Minnesota, and Jones with St. Louis. After Edwards became a Viking, Barry Switzer, the Cowboys coach, launched the unintentional comedy routine of the year when he complained, "I guess team loyalty doesn't mean anything anymore, just chasing the dollar."

Prime Time

Less than six months earlier, the Cowboys and their owner, Jerry Jones, set the standard for wretched excess in free agency by signing cornerback/virtuoso Deion Sanders to a $35 million package. Dallas was the third team in three seasons for Sanders, whose signing bonus was larger than the entire contract of Emmitt Smith, the Cowboys' great running back.

When Deion's contract with San Francisco ran out last year, Jones lusted after him. The Cowboys already had a commanding lead in the NFC East when he was signed, but the owner felt the high price was worth keeping him away from the 49ers and assuring the NFC title for Dallas. As it turned out, the Cowboys were less dominant with Sanders than without him. There was a major embarrassment when San Francisco came into Texas Stadium and flattened the 'Boys in what was considered a critical at-season game.

As it turned out, the 49ers caved in on their own and the dramatic NFC championship rematch never materialized. Sanders was a major factor in the title victory over Green Bay as an offensive weapon, but much less of a factor in the Super Bowl victory over Pittsburgh.

Dallas needs to receive its money's worth from Deon this season both as a cornerback in the depleted defense and an offensive force in a more equalized NFC. Sanders needs Hall of Fame seasons to justify that money, since his presence on the payroll has restricted the Cowboys in so many ways.

To replace the departed linebackers the 'Boys signed journeyman Fred Strickland of Green Bay. After they lost Stepnoski to Houston a year ago, they signed 38-year-old Ray Donaldson from Seattle as a replacement. Late last season, Donaldson broke his leg and Derek Kennard was signed out of retirement. This spring, with Donaldson's future in doubt and Kennard retired once again, Dallas was scrambling to find a bargain free agent to start at center.

Dealing With Defections

Two years ago, the 49ers and their savvy team president, Carmen Policy, were thought to have mastered the salary cap as the franchise battled its way on the field and maneuvered its way off it to another Super Bowl victory. Things have changed. The Niners have lost 13 players to free agency since it started. Most of them were inconsequential, but last year the losses became damaging. Sanders and running back Ricky Watters, and then last spring Eric Davis, an outstanding young cornerback.

The loss of Watters to the Eagles eventually became the negative that cut short San Francisco's title defense in its first playoff game. Following Watters' defection, William Floyd, the power back who was to become the featured ball carrier in 1995, suffered a season-ending knee injury. After that the running game floundered. In the playoff loss to Green Bay, running back Adam Walker, who had to play despite a cast which covered his broken hand, fumbled early in the game and the Packers' Craig Newsome ran the recovery back 31 yards for a touchdown. It was the game's turnaround play.

The 49ers' own excursions into free agency have been uneven. Dallas linebacker Ken Norton Jr. was an important addition, but mostly the Niners hunt aged bargains. They got one good year out of ex-Saint Rickey Jackson and now they hope for another out of Chris Doleman, who backed up in Atlanta.

Buffalo was hammered from the start of free agency, losing two Pro Bowl tackles, Will Wolford and Howard Ballard, which sent the Bills' hurry-up offense into quick descent. Then last year, Buffalo struck back shifting its emphasis to defense. Among the reconstructive moves was the acquisition of Green Bay linebacker Bryce Paup, arguably the most effective free agent signed since the new way came to the NFL. Paup led the league with 17 1/2 sacks and the Bills' once labby pass rush became the top sacking team (49). Not coincidentally, Buffalo reclaimed its AFC East title.

Franchise Free Agency

The Bills proved that teams can't afford not to become involved in the market place in one form or another. This year there were teams that could barely partake, some not at all mostly because of another new phenomenon, franchise free agency.

Tampa Bay had plenty of money left under its salary cap, but the uncertainty whether the Bucs would stay in the Tampa Bay area or move elsewhere put a leash on their cash flow. Seattle quickly signed Cincinnati safety Darryl Williams but then got out of the market when owner Ken Behring made an attempt to move his franchise to Anaheim. Houston signed Kansas City receiver Willie Davis, then went silent when its owner, Bud Adams, was uncertain whether he would have to stay in Houston for at least a year or move his franchise to Nashville.

The team formerly known as the Browns knew they would play in Baltimore as the Ravens, but all the money owner Art Modell was to get for moving wasn't available to him until the heat of the free agency season was cooling down. The Ravens didn't add, but rather subtracted Rison's contract was still their major financial problem. The Washington Redskins, awaiting the O.K. to move from RFK Stadium in the District of Columbia to suburban Maryland, barely touched free agency despite the worst record in the NFL over the last three years (13-35).

Jets Ready for Takeoff

Still, as damning as the evidence can be, few teams can afford to sit around wringing their hands and muttering "Isn't it terrible?" The Jets did a version of that last year. The combined salary cap value of their 11 offensive starters was $7.96 million, about a third of which went to their quarterback, Boomer Esiason. They finished last in the NFL in offense and last in the standings.

Last spring, the Jets shot out of the free-agency starting gate. They signed two big tackles, Jumbo Elliott of the Giants and David Williams, the former Oiler. They made thunderous news by signing Neil O'Donnell, the Super Bowl quarterback, away from Pittsburgh, and gave him a top receiver in Jeff Graham of the Bears.

Just how much difference the signing will make to the Jets' won-ost record will depend upon their judgment of the talent. That's what free agency boils down to: judgment of talent.

"The same teams that screw up the college draft," said Bills GM John Butler, "screw up free agency." □

Everybody waits for the Cowboys to lose, but nobody beats them. In grabbing the decade by the throat, Dallas has strangled all comers

by DON PIERSON CHICAGO TRIBUNE

If the NFC is ever going to mean "Not For Cowboys," the Green Bay Packers or Philadelphia Eagles or Chicago Bears or Detroit Lions are going to have to step up and knock the world champions off their lofty perch all by themselves.

The San Francisco 49ers do their part. Sure, they let the Cowboys steal Deion Sanders and they traded them Charles Haley, but the 49ers have beaten the Cowboys three times in a row. Nobody else in the NFC has done that.

In grabbing the decade by the throat, the Cowboys have strangled all comers. Only the Washington Redskins are close, splitting 6-6 in the 1990s, including a sweep last year. But the Redskins haven't been able to beat many other people lately.

The Packers have lost seven in a row to the Cowboys, the last six in Texas Stadium, including playoffs. The Eagles have lost eight of their last nine. The New York Giants have lost seven of their last eight. The Arizona Cardinals have lost their last 11. The Bears have lost both their games against the Cowboys of the '90s.

The Lions. Ah, the Lions. They have won three of four against the Cowboys in the '90s, but the first two victories were in 1991, just before the Cowboys turned mighty.

Waiting Game

Everybody waits for the Cowboys to lose, but nobody beats them. Everybody predicts their demise, then sits back while they win. Everybody figures free agency will get them, only to watch Troy Aikman and Emmitt Smith and Michael Irvin get better than ever.

Everybody guesses the rules and lawsuits will slow down Jerry Jones, who only speeds up. Everybody expects Barry Switzer will bring them down, and he laughs while he clutches the trophy.

Everybody thinks they will self-destruct, yet they stay tough and tall, meeting all challenges.

If loitering until the Cowboys leave is the master plan, the NFC may be in for a long lull. They aren't going anywhere until somebody takes them there. Who will step up?

The Challengers

There are plenty of opportunities. The Cowboys open on the road on Monday night in Chicago. The Bears are the NFL's winningest franchise when it comes to season openers. They have won 37 of them, including 11 of the last 12. They think they're pretty good. They were the only winning team in the league last year not to make the playoffs. This is their chance to show the country the tables are turning.

How do the Cowboys respond? Look at the record. They opened on the road last year against the Giants and began their Super Bowl run with a resounding 35-0 victory. In all three of their Super Bowl winning seasons, they have started out on Monday night. They lost one in Washington in 1993 and still won it all.

night, September 30, in Veterans Stadium. Coach Ray Rhodes already has spliced game film with Switzer's boasts following the Cowboys' 30-11 playoff victory over the Eagles in January.

The 49ers get their shot November 10 in 3-Com Park. The date follows an emotional road trip for Dallas to Miami to play former coach Jimmy Johnson and a division rematch at home against the Eagles.

The Packers get their seventh chance in a row in Texas Stadium, Monday night, November 18, right after the Cowboys return from San Francisco. Is this the charm? Can the Packers break the jinx?

The Redskins get the Cowboys in Dallas on Thanksgiving, four days after the Cowboys travel to New York to play the Giants.

The Cowboys have three Monday night games, two on the road in September, plus another September trip to Buffalo. They play on Thanksgiving. They play four games in the East that start at 4 P.M. to anchor TV double-headers, meaning they travel home late from Buffalo, Miami, New York, and Washington.

You say you want the Cowboys to lose? Go ahead. Beat 'em.

To further balance the scales, the Cowboys allowed four starters from their defense to defect and barely batted an eye. Super Willie Clay, to New England. Spielman might be the one NFC player to turn around the entire AFC.

The Bears, Eagles, Falcons, Panthers, and Rams all raided the AFC in search of defense, a strange place to find it. The Bears signed Miami's top pass rusher, Bryan Cox. The Eagles signed Miami's best defensive back, Troy Vincent. The Falcons signed the Bills' best linebacker, Cornelius Bennett. The Panthers signed the Steelers' pass-rushing linebacker Kevin Greene. The Rams signed the Chargers' best pass rusher, Leslie O'Neal. The NFC figured if the AFC can steal its two best pass rushers last season in Bryce Paup and Pat Swilling, turnabout is fair play.

Who Is Passing Whom?

The conventional wisdom is the NFC runs and plays defense while the AFC passes and chases. It's been that way since Walter Payton and Eric Dickerson were running for the NFC and John Elway, Jim Kelly, and Dan Marino were drafted by the AFC. So what is happening now?

Nine NFC receivers broke the 100-catch mark last season; none in the AFC. Detroit's Herman Moore caught 123 to break the record of 122 set in 1994 by Minnesota's Cris Carter. Carter and San Francisco's Jerry Rice each had 122. St. Louis's Isaac Bruce had 119. Dallas's Irvin had 111.

top eight passers in the AFC threw 145

Up-and-Comers

If the Giants win more than five games, defensive coordinator Mike Nolan goes directly to the head of the class.

If Philly keep winning with the NFL's No. 29 pass offense, offensive coordinator Jon Gruden knows more than he should.

If the Bears outscore the Packers for a change, offensive coordinator Ron Turner joins brother Norv in the front seat.

Oldies and Goodies

Nobody played better at linebacker than Carolina's Sam Mills, 37 and counting. Nobody had more sacks in the NFC than Philadelphia's William Fuller (34). Nobody ever kicked more 50-yard field goals than Atlanta's Morten Andersen (36). No 39-year-old quarterback ever threw 33 TD passes until Minnesota's Warren Moon. Nobody in the NFC caught 50 passes for a better average than the 17.9 yards turned in by Washington's Henry Ellard (35). Nobody ever played linebacker at age 40. Will Atlanta's Clay Matthews?

Keep an Eye On

Rashaan Salaam. The Bears' running back was the youngest player in the league last season. Only three years removed from eight-man high school football, he gained 1,074 yards.

Kerry Collins. Who says there are no young quarterbacks? The guy won seven of his 13 starts with an expansion team.

Frank Sanders. No NFC rookie receiver caught more passes than he did, and he plays for the Cardinals.

Gilbert Brown. If he stays healthy, the Packers won't be able to hide this 330-pounder stuck between Reggie White and Sean Jones.

Johnny Johnson. He wasn't bad when he left two years ago. Now the running back is with a good team, the 49ers.

Lawrence Phillips. All eyes are on the Rams' rookie running back, the best player in the draft.

Bowl MVP cornerback Larry Brown and defensive tackle Russell Maryland, the former No. 1 pick of the draft, signed with Oakland. Linebackers Robert Jones and Dixon Edwards fled to St. Louis and Minnesota, respectively, where they hope to be used more than the one or two downs the Cowboys needed them.

The 49ers lost their top cornerback for the second year in a row. Eric Davis went to Carolina, following Deion Sanders' exit to Dallas. This is no way to cover Michael Irvin or Herman Moore or Robert Brooks.

The Lions lost All-Pro linebacker Chris Spielman to Buffalo and All-Pro left tackle Lomas Brown to Arizona. They replaced them with Michael Brooks and Ray Roberts. The Lions also lost their leading interceptor, Moore's teammate Brett Perriman had 108, making Moore and Perriman the most prolific duo in history.

In the erstwhile Black and Blue Central Division, home of Ray Nitschke and Dick Butkus and Alan Page and Spielman, the Packers, Vikings, Lions, and Bears produced the 1-2-3-4 quarterbacks in touchdown passes: Brett Favre (38), Warren Moon (33), Scott Mitchell (32), and Erik Kramer (29). The top eight passers in the NFC, according to passer rating, threw 218 touchdown passes. The

Dallas Cowboys

The king Cowboys already have lived long by NFL standards. They are the team of the '90s with the decade only half over.

To continue their success at such a high level would defy reason if not rules.

Enter Jerry Jones. Here is an owner who lives by the motto Rules are made to be bent if not broken. While being sued by fellow owners for $300 million for alleged violations of licensing agreements, Jones is being pursued by 29 other teams on the field. Make that 30. In an apparent effort to create more competition, the Cowboys are busy trying to dismantle themselves.

MITCHELL & REIBEL

Troy Aikman ascends from excellent to spectacular in the playoffs, trailing only Bart Starr in the all-time rankings.

Withstand and Deliver

So far, the Cowboys have been able to withstand the attention of injury and free-agency defection caused by the limitations of the salary cap. They have been able to endure as long as Troy Aikman is handing off to Emmitt Smith and throwing to Michael Irvin. Now Irvin threatens to spoil the trio of fun by getting indicted for possession of cocaine and marijuana.

But even if Irvin must miss playing time on a suspension, it might not be enough. For one thing, Deion Sanders has come to the rescue again. He skipped baseball to concentrate on adding wide receiver to his résumé. Coach Barry Switzer already has christened him a potential all-star once Deion goes through an off-season and training camp.

Meanwhile, the Cowboys' defense lost four more starters and has barely noticed. Not yet anyway. Until the replacements are exposed as ordinary or until Charles Haley can no longer rush the passer, the defense will continue to be good enough to complement the team's great offensive strength.

Who can stop the Cowboys if not themselves? That's the question on the minds of defensive coordinators everywhere as they look at Aikman, Smith and Irvin and see three guys who were leading the league in passing, running and receiving at one time last season.

Accurate Aikman

Aikman finished behind only Jim Harbaugh and Brett Favre in passer rating during the regular season. In the postseason, Aikman ascends from excellent to spectacular, trailing only Green Bay's Bart Starr in the all-time rankings. Put him in the playoffs and Aikman gets sharper. His postseason passer rating of 104.3 is more than 20 points better than his lofty 83.5 for the regular season.

Aikman will turn 30 this season, which in quarterback years means he is only entering prime time. One of the most accurate passers ever, he completed over 70 percent in seven of the 14 games he played last season. This year, his long passing accuracy could get a welcome test if the Sanders experiment works. Aikman is backed by Wade Wilson and Jason Garrett.

Prime-Time Reception

Irvin set a record with 11 games of 100 yards receiving and finished with 111 catches and 10 touchdowns, career highs, proving he didn't need Alvin Harper on the other side after all. Could he use Sanders on the other side? The Cowboys will find out when Sanders is used to spell Kevin Williams. This is not a gimmick. When the Cowboys began off-season workouts in April, Sanders was a regular for special sessions between quarterbacks and receivers. He is determined to keep viable the commercial possibilities of the word "both."

Always forgotten in the mix by everybody but Aikman is tight end Jay Novacek, the most ignored five-time Pro Bowler. His 62 receptions tied him for first at his position in the NFC. He is the man Aikman looks for whenever there is trouble. Blocker Kendell Watkins was effective as a rookie, but as is the case almost everywhere you look on this team, the Cowboys are not deep at receiver, which is why they drafted Stepfret Williams of Northeast Louisiana.

Smith on Payton Pace

At age 27, Smith is coming off his greatest season, with 1,773 yards and an NFL-record 25 touchdowns. The yardage put him over the halfway mark toward Walter Payton's rushing record (16,726 to 8,956). He became only the fifth player to earn four rushing titles and is now only 14 rushing touchdowns away from Payton's mark of 110. For the first time in years, the Cowboys feel somewhat comfortable giving Smith a breather, as Sherman Williams looked good in brief appearances as a rookie.

Experience on the Line

The Cowboys are getting no younger up front and lost top backup Ron Stone to the Giants. But if third-round rookie Clay Shiver of Florida State can compete with 38-year-old Ray Donaldson at center, it will be a good sign for the future. Donaldson is coming off a broken leg. Left tackle Mark Turner begins season 14 at age 36 and left guard Nate Newton begins season 11 and will turn 35 before it's over. To continue the tradition of fat guards, the Cowboys selected 6-2, 330-pound Kenneth McDane of Norfolk State in round five. Right guard Larry Allen, the team's youngest lineman, is also the best, outplaying right tackle Erik Williams and making his first Pro Bowl.

Defensive Defections

The defense lost two No. 1 draft choices, Russell Mary and Robert Jones, and the Most Valuable Player in the Super Bowl, Larry Brown. It also lost linebacker Dixon Edwards. Still, Dallas expects big things. Chad Hennings will replace Maryland and at tackle next to Leon Lett. Unless Darren Benson or Hurvin McCormack or draft choice Mike Ulufale can help out, the Cowboys are bound to miss the rotation system that kept the tacklers fresh.

For the second time in three years, the first draft choice was a defensive end. Kavika Pittman of McNeese State, a second-rounder, follows the selection of Shante Carver in '95. If they can hold up, both will get plenty of opportunity to spell Haley and Tony Tolbert. Haley had 10 1/2 sacks despite a back injury that keeps him from practicing. At age 32 entering his 11th season, he is unlikely to get healthier.

Dealing With Free Agency

To replace Jones and Edwards, the Cowboys signed free agents from the NFC Central, Minnesota's Broderick Thomas and Green Bay's Fred Strickland, and drafted Georgia's Randall Godfrey in the second round. Similar to Jones, Strickland should be able to plug the middle. Thomas is bigger than the prototypical Dallas linebacker and can provide a pass-rush dimension if his off-field problems are settled. He was arrested on drunken driving and possession of a handgun charges within a six-month period. He will have to beat out Godfrey Myles, who is coming off knee surgery, and stay ahead of Godfrey. Darrin Smith is the Cowboys' best linebacker and Jim Schwantz is the top reserve.

Secondary Strength

Super Bowl MVP Brown joined Maryland in fleeing to the Oak and Raiders, but with the recovery of Kevin Smith from Achilles surgery, Brown was not likely to start the season anyway. Sanders makes the whole secondary better with his ability to take away the opponent's best receiver. Strong safety Darren Woodson, also a Pro Bowler, signed a big contract to stay. Free safety Brock Marion tied Brown for the team lead with six interceptions. The Cowboys lost backup Robert Bailey to Miami, but have Alundis Brice, Charlie Williams, Bill Bates and Scott Case as reserves and traded for Atlanta's Roger Harper.

Kicking Back

Chris Boniol led the NFL in kicking accuracy, missing only one of 28 tries on a team that barely needs field goals. John Jett punted fewer times (53) than anybody else. When Kevin Williams needs help returning punts or kickoffs, he can always call on Sanders.

Philadelphia Eagles

Ray Rhodes wants his Eagles to have a one-track mind. Dallas After the Cowboys eliminated the Eagles in the playoffs in January, Cowboys coach Barry Switzer said "We kicked their [rear]." Rhodes has turned it into a battle cry his team will hear until their Monday night meeting September 30.

"Everything's been recorded and taped

The sound byte's been recorded and taped. It'll be spliced into our game film. Every time we look at the film, that will be spliced in," Rhodes said. "Every coach in the league loves it when comments like that are made. They get your team fired up."

Colossus of Rhodes

Everything Rhodes does is aimed at the Cowboys. The Eagles made huge tackle Jermaine Mayberry their No. 1 draft choice with the idea of starting him at left guard to match up against Dallas defensive tackle Leon Lett. Last year's left guard, Guy McIntyre, was good but undersized in a division with Lett, Eric Swann, and now the Redskins' Sean Gilbert. Mayberry weighs 320

"A lot goes into being able to match up with them and do certain things," Rhodes said.

That Rhodes is able to concentrate on the world champions is a minor miracle in itself. By all rights, the Eagles had no business winning 10 games in Rhodes's rookie season as coach, not with the 29th passing offense and a patchwork lineup. But there they were, the only NFC team to get outscored and still make the playoffs. Rhodes was an easy choice for Coach of the Year.

Defying Convention

On the way, he benched prima donna quarterback Randall Cunningham for journeyman Rodney Peete, whose leadership enabled the Eagles to win 10 of the 13 games in which he started or played a major role off the bench. He threw only eight touchdown passes and 14 interceptions, finishing 13th in the NFC in passer rating. But the Eagles won.

This year, Rhodes is defying convention again. He signed Green Bay backup Ty Detmer to compete for the starting job, even though Detmer has thrown 21 passes in four years as a pro, two of which he didn't play a down. What attracts the Eagles to the barely six-foot Detmer is his knowledge of the system installed by Eagles offensive coordinator Jon Gruden, who tutored Detmer in Green Bay. Said Rhodes: "I think he's going to surprise a lot of people. He's smart. He's a winner. That counts a lot in my book. He's one of those guys who finds a way to get it done." Ohio State's Bobby Hoving is a third-round prospect with pro size who might be in the right place at the right time.

Revamped Receiving Corps

The Eagles addressed a real problem in the receiving corps by signing veteran Irving Fryar from Miami to replace the departed Fred Barnett. At age 33, Fryar is a gamble, but he proved he still has some big-play capability left. Rhodes is hopeful second-year man Chris T. Jones will make his presence felt and at least push last year's leading receiver, Calvin Williams.

What should benefit the passing game more than anything else is the addition of second-round tight end Jason Dunn of Eastern Kentucky, a big, athletic prospect who will be much more of a receiving threat than Ed West, Jimmie Johnson, or Reggie Johnson, who caught only 31 passes among them last year for three touchdowns. Dunn comes with some question marks pertaining to work ethic, but Rhodes recalls that last year's second-round steal, cornerback Bobby Taylor, had a similar reputation that Rhodes quickly straightened out.

Improving the Rush

A passing game is crucial to the survival and effectiveness of running back Ricky Watters, who got his wish of being "the man" when he escaped the star-studded 49ers. Watters rushed 337 times, third in the NFC, but his average was just 3.8 yards, which slid to 2.9 over the last six games as teams ganged up on him. Watters also caught 62 passes, trailing Williams by one as team leader.

Sure to improve the running game is the expected return of blocking fullback Kevin Turner, the ex Patriot who missed all of last season with a knee injury. If Turner is effective, it will benefit both Watters and change-of-pace scatback Charlie Garner, whose 5.4-yard average led the league for any runner with more than 100 carries. Fred McCrary, James Saxon, and Derrick Witherspoon lend depth.

The Main Line

Mayberry isn't the only change on the offensive line. The Eagles expect Bernard Williams to return from a drug suspension. He will compete with second-year man Barrett Brooks and former San Francisco starter Steve Wallace at left tackle. Free-agent acquisition Richard Cooper from the Saints will replace one of Buddy Ryan's leftover mistakes, right tackle Antone Davis. Lester Holmes is back from a patellar tendon injury and should be able to take over at right guard. Joe Panos is supposed to replace Raleigh McKenzie at center. Harry Boatswain, Joe Rudolph, Frank Cornish, and Mo Elewonibi are backups.

William Fuller tied for the NFC lead with 13 sacks from left end and was ideally complemented by left tackle Andy Harmon, who had 11. Together, they formed the most productive sack tandem in the NFC, ranking behind only the Bills' Bryce Paup and Bruce Smith in the league. Mike Mamula had 5 1/2 sacks as a rookie, but they came in two games. He is limited because of size, but pass rushers usually make considerable improvement between their first and second years. Right tackle Rhett Hall missed most of last season with a blood clot in his lung but is back in action. Kevin Johnson and Ronnie Dixon will push for playing time. Dan Stubbs was lost to Miami.

Losing Gouveia

Losing middle linebacker Kurt Gouveia to San Diego leaves the Eagles with Derrick Oden and James Willis, which is why they spent the middle of their draft on two linebackers. Rightside backer William Thomas is coming off an outstanding year. His seven interceptions were the most by an NFL linebacker since Baltimore's Stan White had eight in 1975. Left linebacker Bill Romanowski went to Denver, leaving Marc Woodard the job unless fourth-rounder Ray Farmer of Duke can make the switch from his college position of free safety. At 6-3 and 225, Farmer has the size.

Turning the Corner

Signing cornerback Troy Vincent from the Dolphins more than makes up for the loss of Mark McMillan to the Saints. Although McMillan was an excellent cover man, his 5-7 stature limited him. The 6-0 Vincent will look good on the left side opposite the 6-3 Taylor, who came into his own as a rookie with a big game against the Cowboys' Michael Irvin.

Michael Zordich is back at strong safety and Rhodes expects his second No. 2 draft pick, Brian Dawkins of Clemson, to replace Greg Jackson as the starting free safety. Derrick Frazier, Jerome Henderson, Eric Zornit, and David Whitmore will compete for backup jobs.

Hits and Misses

The Eagles got excellent punting from rookie Tom Hutton, who finished third in the NFC. Veteran Gary Anderson hit only 8 of 15 field goals from beyond 40 yards, not a great year for one of the most accurate kickers in history. He is 37. The Eagles were below average in returning kicks. Kelvin Martin got hurt and nobody else stepped up. The coverage teams need big-time improvement. They allowed two punts for touchdowns.

Arizona Cardinals

The last time Vince Tobin followed Buddy Ryan, the players were better and so were expectations. Tobin took over the defense of the Chicago Bears after the magical 1985 season when Ryan took over the Philadelphia Eagles. Tobin's Chicago defenses set records that Ryan's defenses couldn't, yet the Bears never returned to the Super Bowl. Assuming the reins of the Arizona Cardinals after the "winner in town" left as a loser presents new problems. Although fans are happy to see Tobin, they would prefer to spot players who can provide results.

Tobin agrees. One of the first things he did was rescue quarterback Boomer Esiason from the New York Jets in a youth movement. Although Esiason is 35, his predecessor, Dave Krieg, is 37. Improvement often appears in small increments.

OTTO GRE - REALSPORT USA

If all fullback Larry Centers did was catch, it would be enough. But he also runs, blocks, provides inspiration with his all-out playing style, and is a fan favorite.

Attention to Offense

That Tobin is paying any attention at all to offense is a novel approach compared to Ryan's habit of sticking half the team in a closet only to be opened in case of emergency. Ryan figured his defense was good enough to stop offenses and score enough points itself to win. So he showed no respect for his own offense, leading to a demise that was in part a self-fulfilling prophecy. The offense went five games without a touchdown for the second year under Ryan's guidance. Krieg deserved a better fate and was rightfully heralded as a tough competitor surviving in an impossible situation.

Caught in the Draft

Tobin showed where the Cards need help by drafting seven offensive players, but not until he had used the third pick of the first round to satisfy his own desire for a pass rusher Simeon Rice of Illinois.

Rebuilding self-esteem may be a greater task for Tobin than rebuilding his roster. The Cardinals do have more good players than your average 4-12 team. Ryan had four Pro Bowlers—defensive tackle Eric Swann, cornerback Aeneas Williams, fullback Larry Centers, and punter Jeff Feagles—one for every victory.

So Tobin believes he inherited a far from hopeless situation. "I think the nucleus of this team is such that we can put together an excellent football team, hopefully in a very, very short period of time," he said.

Passing Grade for Boomer

That's great news for Esiason, whose role as quarterback of the 3-13 Jets last year was vindicated when the Jets spent the 1st and 31st picks in the draft on wide receivers and signed free agent Jeff Graham of the Bears to boot. When a quarterback has nowhere to throw, it is difficult to abel him washed up.

Esiason finished lower than Krieg in passing efficiency last season, but he didn't have Krieg's 21 interceptions and 16 fumbles, as the Cards led the league with 43 turnovers. New Arizona offensive coordinator Jim Fassel watched tape from last season and taked to Cincinnati offensive coordinator

Bruce Coslet, Esiason's former head coach with the Jets, before the Cards signed him.

"I wasn't expecting to see much," Fassel said. "I thought, 'Well, he's probably done, over the hill.' But when I watched him play and rated him individually, I ended up with a very good grade."

The Cardinals also signed former Giants backup Kent Graham from Detroit's roster to provide some competition for Esiason. And second-year prospect Stoney Case has possibilities for the future.

Welcome Receptions

With Rob Moore and rookie find Frank Sanders as the starting wide receivers, the quarterbacks have solid targets. Ex-Jet Moore, Esiason's favorite target in 1994, led Cardinal wideouts with 63 catches. Sanders had 52, including 15 of the team's 36 plays of 25 yards or more. His 17-yard average was among the NFL leaders. Anthony Edwards showed promise as a third receiver and Stevie Anderson is a 6-5 target with potential. Chuck Levy's future is uncertain following a year on suspension.

Tight end was such a trouble spot that Ryan was using a defensive tackle, Wendall Gaines, until turning to Oscar McBride, the only tight end on the roster when Tobin arrived. When USC's Johnny McWilliams fell to them on the third round of the draft, the Cards were ecstatic. The 260-pounder is a former quarterback who can run and will have a chance to start right away.

Backfield in Motion

Garrison Hearst rushed for 1,070 yards, but his 3.8-yard average and only one touchdown were indications that his knee injury as a rookie took its toll. So Tobin was happy when breakaway threat Leeland McElroy of Texas A&M lasted until early in the second round. LeShon Johnson, a late-season pickup from Green Bay a year ago, also provides speed.

The Cardinals' best offensive player is fullback Centers, who led the team with 101 receptions, breaking the league record for running backs. If all he did was catch, it would be enough, but Centers also runs, blocks, provides inspiration with his all-out playing style, and is a fan favorite.

Stabilizing the Line

Tobin began his tenure not by hiring quarterbacks, but by signing left tackle Lomas Brown from Detroit to stabilize a very shaky line. If Brown could only play both tackle spots at once, the outlook would be brighter. Tackles Ernest Dye and Joe Wolf both went down with Achilles' heel injuries, signaling the beginning of the end for Ryan. Left guard Duval Love was the only 16-game starter on the line and center Ed Cunningham signed with Chicago after sharing time with Jamie Dukes. Mike Devlin was signed from Buffalo to play center. Anthony Redmon, Dye, and Larry Tharpe are possibilities at right guard and will compete with rookies Aaron Graham, James Dexter, Harry Stamps, and Ethan Brooks for backup work.

Swann's Way

The Swann situation bears watching as Tobin tries to assemble a defensive front. Given permission to seek a trade after being tagged with the franchise designation, Swann discovered his market value was greater than the Cardinals are required to pay him under the rules. He skipped the first mini-camp, but when the Cardinals turned down trade offers from Denver and Tampa, Swann appeared stuck in Arizona.

While the selection of Rice hedges against losses in the defensive line, Rice doesn't play the same position as Swann and can't be expected to make a similar impact as a rookie. With Michael Bankston, Clyde Simmons, and Bernard Wilson, the Cards have decent talent, but Swann is the key to everything, including the first year impressions of Rice and Tobin.

Best in the Business

Eric Hill has the credentials if not the recognition as the best middle linebacker in football. Seth Joyner may be slowing down at outside linebacker, but he was

DAVE BLACK

Washington Redskins

Proving they can beat the world champion Dallas Cowboys is a healthy start for the Redskins, the only team in the league with double-digit losing seasons the last three years

In his second year at the helm in 1995 coach Norv Turner beat his former team both times, a signal the Redskins have bottomed out. As a reminder of glory days, the coach who took them to the top, Joe Gibbs, was a recent inductee into the Hall of Fame.

Feeling the Pressure

Back to their time-tested tricks of wheeling and dealing draft picks for players, the Redskins gave up the sixth spot in last spring's grab bag to land defensive tackle Sean Gilbert from St. Louis. Whether he is able to make a big difference depends largely on the performance of their 1994 No. 1 pick, quarterback Heath Shuler, who must beat back the challenge of Gus Frerotte for the third year in a row. Frerotte arrived in the seventh round of the same draft that produced Shuler, so the Redskins aren't particular where their players come from, and don't seem embarrassed when top picks struggle. Already gone from the roster are 1991 first pick Bobby Wilson and '92 No. 1 Desmond Howard.

As a rebuilding never is a pleasant task, especially with owner Jack Kent Cooke constantly predicting winning seasons to push luxury suite sales for his new Maryland stadium. Like most folks, Cooke figures if the Redskins can beat the best team in the world, they must be able to beat everybody else, logic that doesn't make Turner's job any easier.

Quarterback Draw

Regardless of shortcomings almost everywhere else, the onus to succeed falls mostly on the quarterback. And Turner doesn't know who that is. Shuler claims it: "The way I look at it, it's my job and Gus has to beat me out." But Turner indicates the race remains open: "I haven't told either guy he's the starter. I want each guy going to camp thinking he's going to be the quarterback. They're each going to take half the work until we decide otherwise."

Because of Shuler's loftier draft status it would appear Frerotte would have to finish better than a tie in any competition. Shuler was the man before a hand injury knocked him out in December. But Turner might use most of the exhibition season before officially making an announcement.

Little Drop-Off for Receivers

The quarterbacks will be relying on some things new and some things old to make the Redskins go. Michael Westbrook finished an up-and-down rookie season on the upbeat and the big wide receiver should be ready to supplant 35-year-old Henry Ellard as the No. 1 target. Ellard gets better with age and showed little drop-off last year with his second 1,000-yard season since arriving from the Rams. His average per catch of 17.9 yards remained among the best in the league. His experience is an invaluable teaching tool for Westbrook, whose rookie season was slowed by various nagging injuries. He caught only one touchdown pass, but flashed enough potential for the Redskins to feel excited about his future. In only 40 touches of the football as a rookie, Westbrook broke 11 plays for more than 20 yards.

Lesie Shepherd is a big-play third receiver. While in on only half the Redskins' snaps, he exploded five times for more than 40 yards. Tytus Winans and Olanda Truitt are experienced reserves now. The Redskins got very little in the way of receiving production from tight ends Scott Galbraith and Jamie Asher, but they expect more this year.

Capital Gains

At running back, the Redskins got more than they bargained for with ex-Viking Terry Allen, the free-agent steal of the year. For only $450,000, Allen gained 1,309 yards and scored 10 touchdowns, displaying the toughness between the tackles that is his trademark.

To complement Allen, the Redskins have one of the league's most versatile players in Brian Mitchell, who runs, catches, and returns. The best in the league as a combination kick and punt returner, he is so valuable in those areas that his contribution as a third-down receiver and change-of-pace back are often overlooked.

Fourth-round draft choice Stephen Davis of Auburn is an interesting prospect who is coming off knee surgery following two 1,000-yard seasons. He has been compared to Herschel Walker in size and running style. Marc Logan is the starting fullback.

Line Changes

Turner and general manager Charlie Casserly were able to trade back into round one to land Penn State offensive tackle Andre Johnson to bolster an area of need. With left guard Ray Brown gone to San Francisco and left tackle Jim Lachey battling age and injury, there is room for youth. Free agent guard Bob Dahl is expected to play opposite Tre Johnson, with John Giese and last year's injured rookie, Cory Raymer, at center, and Ed Simmons at right tackle. Joe Patton subbed for Lachey last year.

Rushing Defense

If Gilbert can't turn around a run defense that was 29th, the trade was a waste. Gilbert, Marc Bouite, and Tony Woods represent three-fourths of the Rams' 1993 defensive line, which was barely average (18th) against the run. Bouite and Gilbert will be the starting tackles while Rich Owens and Sterling Palmer will be the ends.

"This is the quickest way we can win this year. There clearly was not a better college defensive player that we could have drafted to get better," Casserly said. He compared the move to the 1975 trade of two No. 1 picks for Dave Butz, who spent 14 years in Washington stopping the run.

The depth on the defensive line—Tim Johnson, Mike Flores, Leonard Renfro, Ervin Collier, Romeo Bandison, Dexter Nottage, and William Gaines—appears to offer more emergency help than starting competition.

The Complete Linebacker

The Redskins were better defending the pass (7th), but were so mediocre against the run that a true measure of their ability is skewed. Linebacker Ken Harvey remains the star of the defense even though his sacks fell from 13 1/2 to 7 1/2. He had 16 tackles for losses. A complete player, Harvey is asked to cover as well as rush, and he makes teams aware of his presence. Marcus Patton led the team in tackles from his outside spot and Rod Stephens holds down middle linebacker. Darrick Brown and Matt Vanderbeek are reserves.

Cornerstones

Tom Carter is coming off his best season with four interceptions and growing knowledge of the cornerback position to go with his talent. Darrell Green starts his 14th season at the other corner and can't ask forever, can he? He only has the longest starting streak on the team. The depth remains untested with Darryl Pounds and Scott Turner. Ex-Charger Stanley Richard and ex-Cowboy James Washington got better at the safety positions as the season progressed and they became more familiar with each other. Backups Darryl Morrison and Ken Taylor will press for playing time.

Return Investments

Special teams are outstanding, ranking first in the league according to a formula comparing return averages for and against. Mitchell is a threat to score whenever he gets the ball. He finished second in punt returns and first in kickoff returns, the only player ranked so high in both categories. Eddie Murray can still kick at age 40 and Matt Turk's net punting average of 37.7 yards was excellent, especially for a first-year player.

New York Giants

A 5-11 record is very un-Giant like. How to undo it is the problem of coach Dan Reeves, who is as perplexed as the next guy about why it happened. He had predicted 11-5, which is why coaches usually avoid prognostications like the plague. It also indicates something fundamentally wrong. Overestimating your team is more dangerous than underestimating it.

Searching for Clues

A quick scan of the roster reveals plenty of clues that point to mediocrity. Where are the playmakers? Where are the defensive stalwarts? Where is the quarterback? A 29th-ranked offense and a below-average defense ranked 27th against the run expose holes that one free-agent season or one draft is not liable to patch. Unless the Giants take unexpected leaps in ability from within their own roster, they do not appear to be able to compete in the NFC East.

A closer look at the 5-11 record also exposes how it was rightfully earned. The Giants beat all five opponents that finished under .500 and lost to all 11 opponents that finished .500 or better. In other words, there wasn't much fluky about their season.

Passing Notes

Can Dave Brown fix it? The good-guy quarterback obviously can't do it alone. Phil Simms wasn't asked to do that either. Brown threw a low number of interceptions

With the worst passing attack in the league, it was crucial for the Giants to keep running back Rodney Hampton.

(10) and a low number of touchdown passes (11) last year, demonstrating that he leans neither toward bad plays nor big plays. And directing the 30th-ranked passing offense in the league is not something you put at the top of the resume.

That the Giants drafted Florida State's Danny Kanell in the fourth round is bound to stir the passions of the Giant faithful not generally known for patience. Despite limitations in arm strength and athletic ability, Kanell is no stranger to big plays, having thrown 49 touchdown passes in his last two seasons in a big-time pro-style offense. At 6-3, 220, Kanell is certainly big enough and his statistics are impressive enough that it will be impossible for the Giants to sneak him onto the roster. If Reeves thinks Tommy Maddox is ready to play, why should he wait on Kanell?

Big-Play Potential

A lack of big-play receivers limits Brown's production, and the 1996 Giants are counting a lot on their 1994 No. 1 draft choice Thomas Lewis, to break out after catching only 16 passes his first two injury-plagued years. They expect Lewis to replace Mike Sherrard opposite their leading receiver from last year, Chris Calloway, in a dangerously thin unit. Drafting Michigan's big and fast Amani Toomer in the second round could help. Toomer will get every chance to move immediately into the starting lineup, but Giant fans recall only too well that last year's No. 1 draft choice from Michigan running back Tyrone Wheatley, wasn't nearly ready for the big time. Omar Douglas is a backup with some experience.

H-back Aaron Pierce and tight end Howard Cross give Brown two big dependable targets, but neither caught a pass for more than 26 yards last year and they can't stretch a defense.

Quiet Superstar

With the worst passing attack in the league, it was crucial for the Giants to keep running back Rodney Hampton, one of the league's quietest superstars. Hampton turned out his fifth 1,000-yard season in a row last fall, relegating the hotshot Wheatley to only 78 carries and a disappointing

New York Giants

3.1-yard average Wheatley's track speed was supposed to offer at least a change of pace for Hampton, a career 3.9 workhorse. But his longest run was only 19 yards and he barely outgained Brown.

Even with Herschel Walker still around to fill in around the cracks, the Giants couldn't afford not to match the $16.45 million offer sheet the 49ers presented Hampton. After discovering he wasn't going to be handed a job, Wheatley will have to compete for carries this year. The Giants are happier with last year's sixth-round pick, fullback Charles Way, a fine lead blocker and receiving threat.

Line Change

The huge offensive line, once the cornerstone of two Super Bowl champions, is undergoing an almost complete change, a sure sign a team is rebuilding. The departure of left tackle Jumbo Elliott to the Jets is a blow. The Giants signed Dallas backup Ron Stone to a stunning $10 million contract because of guard-tackle versatility that somehow never translated into starting time with the Cowboys. Stone will be tried on the left side, either at tackle or guard where Greg Bishop and Scott Davis are penciled in. Davis is coming off a knee injury. Drafting Roman Oben from Louisville in the third round is a signal the left tackle job is open. Brian Williams is the center with second-year pros Rob Zatechka and Scott Gragg expected to replace veterans Lance Smith and Doug Riesenberger at right guard and tackle, respectively. Adam Schreiber and Derek Allen are reserves.

Herschel Walker

Filling a Need

The drafting of Oklahoma defensive end Cedric Jones at the fifth spot in the first round fills a need, but probably not the biggest need on the defense. That would be linebacker, where the team tradition of Sam Huff, Brad Van Pelt, Harry Carson, Lawrence Taylor, and Michael Brooks is in limbo.

Unsettled Linebacking

Losing Brooks to Detroit and failing to sign ex-Lion Chris Spielman in return left the Giants with Corey Widmer in the middle. He has started five games in four seasons. At strongside linebacker is Corey Miller, who was benched for six games last year. On the weakside replacing Mike Croel is Jess Armstrong, who is more effective as a spot player in passing situations. The backups are Ben Taley and Marcus Buckley and sixth-round draft choices Doug Coman of Nebraska and Scott Gaylor of Tennessee. Brooks led the Giants in tackles each of the last two years, but he was moved from the weakside to the middle last season and was not comfortable.

Strength in the Secondary

The secondary is the strength of the defense. The Giants locked up outstanding cornerback Phillip Sparks with a $9.6 million contract. He tied free safety Vance Genn for the team lead with five intercep-

San Francisco 49ers

The 49ers finished last season with a dozen players over the age of 30. But two of them are named Steve Young and Jerry Rice, who still can be trusted as they approach 35 and 34, respectively. So while rebuilding the mature 1994 world champions might be somewhat premature, there are signs of extensive remodeling.

Renovation Projects

Of concern is the leftover paint and plaster being used for the job. To rush the passer, the 49ers brought in Atlanta's Chris Doleman, five days younger than Young. To run the football, they hired Johnny Johnson off the street after failing to land Rodney Hampton from the Giants. Out of football as a free agent last season after two years with the Jets, the 28-year-old Johnson is expected to occupy the void the Niners never filled following the defection last year of Ricky Walters. To patch an offensive line that sent 37-year-old Bart Oates into retirement, they signed 33-year-old Ray Brown from Washington.

CHARLES M. BERNHARDT

Clearly, these are not the moves of a team engaged in long-range planning. Few teams in NFL history have been able to reload as fast and effectively as the 49ers, who still are not willing to concede their Team of the '80s crown to the upstart Dallas Cowboys, the Team of the '90s.

Youth Corps

To that end, the 49ers mortgaged this year's first round in the draft last year when they traded up to get receiver J.J. Stokes. If he is not the next Jerry Rice, he is at the moment the next John Taylor and a reminder to 49er fans that there is indeed youth on this team.

In their worldwide search to refine new talent, the 49ers selected two Nigerian players in the draft, USC defensive end Israel Ifeanyi and Cal wide receiver Ikeanyi Uwaazuoke, players guaranteed to at least make the preseason interesting for play-by-play announcers.

If third-year fullback William Floyd can heal from devastating knee surgery that cost him most of last season—a big if—the 49ers' quest to return to glory will be considerably enhanced.

Catching On

That quest begins, of course, with Young and Rice, still the greatest pitch-and-catch combination in the game. Young completed 67 percent of his passes for 3,200 yards and 20 touchdowns, but his season was interrupted for five weeks by shoulder problems that required surgery. Until he proves otherwise, Young's pinpoint accuracy, timing, and rhythm will be questioned as his October birthday approaches.

Despite Young's absence and the necessity of throwing the untested Elvis Grbac into the fire, Rice is coming off a typically sensational season in which he became the NFL's all-time leader for receptions (942) and yards (15,123), set an NFL single-season record with 1,848 yards, caught a team-record 122 passes, the second-most in NFL history, became the first NFL player to post three seasons of 100-or-more catches, and tied an NFL record with his 10th consecutive season of 50-plus catches.

Returning Home

No wonder Bill Walsh came back. In a surprise move, the Hall of Fame former coach of the 49ers was invited back as an administrative assistant for offense. Head coach George Seifert approved the move after losing offensive coordinators Mike Shanahan and Mike Holmgren in recent years. Although his duties under coordinator Marc Trestman are not clearly defined, Walsh agrees he has no decision-making role. If it is strictly an advisory role, count on Walsh to suggest getting the ball to Rice.

Johnson gained a five-year career high of 931 yards in 1994, so he had not shown signs of being washed up. He also is a good receiver, essential in the 49er offense, and will be playing at home, having grown up in Santa Cruz and played college ball at San Jose State. The 49ers still have last year's leading rusher, Derek

STREET AND SMITH'S PRO FOOTBALL

Lovile, who did score 10 touchdowns despite his critics. As fullback insurance, they added Tommy Vardell from the Browns. Like Johnson, the former Stanford star will be coming home.

On the Receiving End

Stokes survived a broken thumb in his rookie year to catch 38 passes and flash the ability to take pressure off Rice the way Taylor used to do. Depth is thin with Nate Singleton and Chris Thomas. Tight end Brent Jones remains a threat, though his 9.9-yard receiving average was his lowest ever as a starter and his age, 33, gives pause. He constantly plays through injuries. Ted Popson is joined by ex-Viking Adrian Cooper as backup help. Cooper will be their best blocker.

Line Change

The signing of Brown from the Redskins enables the 49ers to make several moves. He will play left guard as last year's left guard, Jesse Sapolu, replaces Oates at center. Kirk Scharford, who started everywhere but center last season, will replace the departed Steve Wallace at left tackle. Harris Barton remains the right tackle. At right guard, there is three-way competition among Derrick Deese, the '94 starter who was hurt last year, Rod Milstead, the '95 starter, and Chris Dalman, who split time with Milstead. Former Patriot and Jaguar Eugene Chung will back up

Sack Time

Doleman brings nine sacks to a defense that surprise—was ranked No. 1 in the league a year ago. If Doleman can get nine again, he might be able to replace Rickey Jackson, who led the club with 9 1/2 at age 37. To help prop up the edges of a frayed unit, the 49ers also added end Roy Barker from the Vikings and traded up in the draft to land USC project Ifeanyi in round two. Ifeanyi started playing football in 1992 and shows enormous potential. Inside, tackles Bryant

Young and Dana Stubblefield are as good a tandem as there is in the league, and Junior Bryant played well when Young was injured part of last season.

Ken Norton remains the leader at line-backer and he will turn 30 in September. Young Lee Woodall and 36-year-old Gary Plummer give defensive coordinator Pete Carroll a solid unit, but depth is a concern with only Kevin Mitchell and Anthony Peterson.

Safeties First

The secondary took a major hit for the second year in a row when cornerback Eric Davis signed with the Panthers, following the exit of Deion Sanders from the '94 champions. That leaves Marquez Pope and Tyrone Drakeford as the starting cornerbacks, and Pope still figures as a better safety than corner. Tim McDonald and Merton Hanks are excellent safeties, who had nine interceptions between them last year, and depth in the middle is better with Dedrick Dodge and Darryl Hall than it is at cornerback.

Special Teams

The 49ers could use help on special teams. Jeff Wilkins was the third place-kicker to get work last season, and appears to be the favorite to stick. Punter Tommy Thompson was inconsistent and specialist Dexter Carter was brought back from the Jets to hold onto the kick-return jobs. Carter's 18-yard average on nine punt returns was impressive.

RICK STEWART, A.L.S.P.O.R.T. USA

Atlanta Falcons

During his time with the Saints, kicker Morten Andersen made a good case for being the team's most valuable player. For much of his tenure, he was the most recognizable name. When he became a Falcon, he was expected to blend in more with the high-powered run-and-shoot offense triggered by quarterback Jeff George.

The Falcons' MVP

Guess what? Andersen might be Atlanta's most valuable player. Amid all the firepower of a team that features the first group of four 1,000-yard producers in league history, Andersen kicked the Falcons into the playoffs and comes into 1996 as once again the most feared foot in the game. His field goals of 52 and 59 yards against the 49ers in the season finale put the Falcons into the wild-card playoff round. It also gave him a record eight field goals over 50 yards on the season.

Twice, Andersen's kicks beat his former team as the Falcons squeezed out a 9-7 record. In the first meeting, he knocked the Saints off in overtime and in the second, he set an NFL record with three field goals over 50 yards and two from 55. Perhaps most impressive is Andersen's kickoff record. He boomed 27 touchbacks, doubling the total of every other team except the Jets, who had 14. Even with that advantage in field position, the Falcons' defense finished 29th in the league.

High-Powered Run-and-Shoot

If the Falcons are to advance beyond their wild-card role, they will have to prove that their run-and-shoot can win on the road, where they lost five straight games in the final eight weeks, including a playoff defeat in chilly Green Bay. In the static conditions of the Georgia Dome, it is a formidable attack. Not only did quarterback Jeff George help turn Terance Mathis, Eric Metcalf, Craig Heyward, and Bert Emanuel into 1,000-yard players, but the Falcons tied for the NFL lead with fewest turnovers (21), refuting the notion that the run-and-shoot is a careless offense.

Although George has thrived in coach June Jones's attack, the Falcons have not been able to hold onto leads or deliver knockout punches. Veteran backup Bobby Hebert rallied the team in the crucial 49er victory, so George still must show he can lead a team to more than a series of spectacular pass completions. His four 300-yard games and 4,143 yards added to his club records as the best passer in Falcon history, so the 500 record of the team in his two years at the helm should be better.

Metcalf, Mathis, and Emanuel make the offense go. They combined for 256 receptions for 3,267 yards and 22 touchdowns a year ago. All are able to gain significant yardage after the catch, a key to the run-and-shoot. Metcalf more than made up for the loss of Andre Rison, catching 104 passes, returning punts, some kickoffs, and serving as a change-of-pace to fullback Heyward. Tyrone Brown looks like a natural successor to J.J. Birden, who was plagued by injury. Roell Preston is another prospect.

Heyward is coming off a Pro Bowl season after averaging 4.6 yards per rush and talking about reducing his former 300-pound frame from 260 to 240. His receiving ability belies his looks as he fills the role in the one-back offense as well as anybody ever has. Despite Heyward's size, however, the Falcons have shown shortcomings in short yardage. Jamal Anderson is Heyward's little-used backup. In the draft, the Falcons added Winston-Salem's Richard Huntley, who led NCAA Division II rushers.

Stability in the Line

Up front, the Falcons showed their appreciation to left tackle Bob Whitfield with a huge off-season contract that ensures he will be the cornerstone for years. They also re-signed center Roman Fortin and expect right tackle David Richards and guards Mike Zandofsky and Robbie Tobeck to repeat their performances of last year when the line finally showed signs of jelling. Huge backup Lincoln Kennedy provides depth at tackle and guard.

On the Defensive

Jones and defensive coordinator Joe Haering would love similar stability on the defensive line, a perennial problem area. Gone are last year's leading sackers, Chris Doleman and Jumpy Geathers. Doleman signed with San Francisco and Geathers was waived, leaving the front with undersized left end Chuck Smith as the top returnee. Top draft choice Shannon Brown of Alabama, though just a third-rounder, has a chance to start right away. At 290, he will be their biggest defensive lineman, but he has a history of injury.

Opposite Smith, the Falcons figure Lester Archambeau as a starting end, although he could be pressed by free-agent acquisition Shane Dronett from the Broncos. Ex-Lion Dan Owens also will push for a starting job somewhere along the front, where 265-pound nose tackle Moe Gardner hustles. And the Falcons hope to squeeze another year out of the aging Pierce Holt. John Burroughs, Travis Hall, and Mel Agee are other candidates for playing time, as is fifth-round end/linebacker Gary Bandy from Baylor.

Help for the Pass Rush

At linebacker, the Falcons made their most impressive off-season acquisition when Buffalo's Cornelius Bennett signed to replace last year's Buffalo addition, Darryl Talley. Atlanta hopes Bennett has more football left in him than Talley did and that he can contribute more in the pass rush. If he can, his presence could prove an enormous boost. Bennett is looking forward to playing in the city where he has lived for years.

Inside linebacker Jessie Tuggle has led the club in tackles for seven straight seasons but could shift outside to make room for second-year man Lorenzo Styles, who appears ready to start after learning as a rookie. His development would provide flexibility with former Charger David Brandon, Ron George and 40-year-old Clay Matthews.

Secondary Roles

The Falcons released strong safety Kevin Ross and traded safety Roger Harper, then traded for the Raiders' Patrick Bates to bolster a secondary that will continue under pressure until the pass rush up front improves. Bates will play strong safety opposite free safety Devin Bush, who came out of Florida State as a junior last season and has outstanding potential. Backup safeties are Alton Montgomery, Louis Riddick and Brad Edwards. At cornerback, the Falcons need Anthony Phillips to recover completely from the broken leg he suffered in the 10th game. Fourth-rounder Juran Bolden played for Winnipeg in the CFL last year and could vie for a starting job. D.J. Johnson is solid at the other corner, and the position has a veteran backup in Darnell Walker and a prospect in second-year man Ron Davis, who will fight for a roster spot.

Special Teams

Andersen is joined by excellent punter Dan Stryzinski on coach Frank Gansz's special teams. Elbert Shelley is a four-time Pro Bowl cover man. Metcalf averaged a modest 9.8 yards on punt returns but was one of only 10 players to return one for a touchdown last season.

New Orleans Saints

In defense of Jim Mora, he knows defense is the only chance for the Saints to win. Trying to outscore the 49ers and Falcons is more difficult than trying to stop them.

But losing the team's two leading receivers to free agency, wideout Quinn Early and tight end Wesley Walls, was not exactly the way the Saints wanted to make the point.

Arrivals and Departures

The Saints made significant inroads on defense by signing free agent linemen Fred Stokes and Darren Mickel and cornerback Mark McMillian and by drafting defensive backs Alex Molden of Oregon and Je'Rod Cherry of Cal with their first two picks. Yet losing players such as Early and Walls seems to have a way of haunting the Saints. Last year, they let place-kicker

Jim Everett remains one of the game's most durable and productive quarterbacks, playing beyond expectations with the Saints.

Morten Andersen get away to Atlanta and linebacker Sam Mills get away to Carolina, and both players helped their new teams finish ahead of the Saints in the NFC West.

This is not a new phenomenon for the Saints, who have not been able to retain the services of such productive players as Brett Perriman, Mel Gray, Craig Heyward, Bobby Hebert, or Jumpy Geathers in recent years. Pass rushers Pat Swilling and Rickey Jackson also have had productive playing time since leaving New Orleans, although it could be argued they overstayed their welcome.

Risky Business

Losing Early and Walls is risky business, especially when quarterback Jim Everett is jumping through hoops to keep the offense above water with virtually no running game to help him out. As a quarterback used to having Eric Dickerson behind him, this is a difficult assignment. Everett has played beyond expectations in his two years with the Saints, throwing 48 touchdown passes and completing 62 percent. At age 33, he remains one of the game's most durable and productive quarterbacks, one who can hardly be blamed for the back-to-back 7-9 records he has endured. The only backup help remains Tom Hodson and young Doug Nussmeier.

Reception Line

Without Early and Walls, the Saints must improve from within or sign an expensive free agent such as Keith Jackson, whom they were pursuing much the way the Packers pursued him last season, without much luck. Early left for Buffalo after leading the club in receiving for two years but noticing he was third on the pay scale behind speedster Michael Haynes and possess on specialst Torrance Small. Last season Early caught more passes (81) than Haynes and Small combined (79), so it was easy for him to demand more pay for twice the work.

The Saints are hoping second-year man Lee DeRamus is ready to fulfil the potential that got lost when he came out of Wisconsin early following a season marred by a broken leg. To provide depth and hope for a diamond in the rough, the Saints drafted three wide receivers in later rounds, starting with the productive Mercury Hayes of Michigan. How can a receiver miss with a name like that!

Walls may be more difficult to replace than Early. The former 49er, lost behind Brent Jones with 11 catches in five years, is a tribute to the fairness of free agency. In two years in New Orleans, he caught 95 passes and parlayed it into a $3.9 million three-year contract in Carolina. The Saints still have Irv Smith, who wasn't far behind Walls with 45 catches last season, but Walls was more of a deep threat and third-down receiver. Paul Green and Kirk Botkin are backups.

Ball Control

After finishing 26th and 28th in rushing since Everett arrived, the Saints would love to improve an area that has such a direct effect on playing good defense. The Saints finished last in the NFC and 28th in the league in ball control, forcing the defense to carry more than its share of the load.

Mario Bates is a good running back, whose 951 yards were compiled at a 3.9-yard average, better than Ricky Walters, Edger Bennett, Garrison Hearst, Errett Rhett, or Rashean Salaam—five of the 10 NFC backs who gained more yards. If second-year fullback Ray Ziliars can shake injuries, Bates is expected to get more chances. Lorenzo Neal is the blocking back and Derek Brown is a spot back. The Saints drafted Oregon's Ricky Whittle in the fourth round.

On the Line

On the offensive line, the Saints put a lot of stock in free-agent pickup Clarence Jones from the Rams to replace the departed Richard Cooper at right tackle. Jones hadn't been able to win a regular job with the Giants or Rams despite impressive physical skills. At left tackle, the Saints boast Willie Roaf; at left guard, they have Pro Bowl candidate Jim Dombrowski, so Everett's backups safe Craig Novitsky is in line to replace Jeff Uhlenhake at center, with Andy McCollum replacing Chris Port at right guard. The depth is thin, with Ed King and Mike Verstegen, so late draft choices Tom Ackerman of Eastern Washington and Keno Hills of Southwest Louisiana will get a chance.

A Rush to Improve

The arrival of Stokes and McKe allow for flexibility on the defensive line, where Mora and general manager Bill Kuharich want to start returning their 22nd-ranked defense to its playoff days. Jim Haslett replaces Monte Kiffin as coordinator.

The Saints want to move left end Joe Johnson to nose tackle next to their best player, Wayne Martin. If McKell or Stokes can handle left end, mission accomplished. Johnson and Martin should provide a great push inside. Martin had 13 sacks last year, tying Philadelphia's William Fuler for the NFC lead. Mora calls the unsung Martin an absolute joy to watch play. At right end, Renaldo Turnbull is coming off a seven-sack season. Willie Broughton will back up at both tackles and third-round draft choice Brady Smith of Colorado State is expected to contribute some pass rush.

Backing Up

The development of last year's No. 1 draft choice Mark Fields, is the key to improved linebacker play. Fields was understandably lost as a rookie, but he is expected to make the usual dramatic strides in his second year on the weak side. He has the tools. Third-year man Winfred Tubbs should be able to handle the middle. Rufus Porter is the strongside backer. Gerard Dixon, Brian Jones, Richard Harvey and Ron Childs are reserves.

Secondary Changes

More changes are expected in the secondary, where Molden and Cherry will see plenty of action in nickel situations and could both vie for starting jobs. The Saints added the 5-7 McMillan to play corner opposite former Philadelphia teammate Eric Allen, but Molden is considered the Cherry could contribute at corner or safety, where Anthony Newman is the strong safety and Vince Buck plays free. The contracts of safety Sean Lumpkin and nickel back Tyrone Legette are uncertain.

Kicking Game

Tyrone Hughes is a dangerous return man who led the league in kickoff returns (66) and yardage (1,617). Pace-kicker Doug Brien caught on from the 49ers to win the impossible job of replacing Andersen. Another ex-49er, Klaus Wilmsmeyer is the punter.

BRIAN BAHR / ALLSPORTUSA

St. Louis Rams

Dramatic, wholesale changes everywhere you look have transformed the Rams into an entirely new team for 1996.

It only follows after moving into a new city and then into a new dome. The hope is for a new start, although last year's wasn't bad. At 4-0, they were the talk of the league. It was the 3-9 finish that dictated an overhaul.

Superhold

No team was bolder in free agency, trades, or the draft than the Rams. Led by president John Shaw, director of operations Steve Ortmayer and coach Rich Brooks, the Rams worked the offseason like there was no tomorrow. From the time they were jilted by hometown product Bryan Cox, the free-agent linebacker from Miami who signed with Chicago before taking a planned trip to St. Louis, the Rams seemed obsessed with wheeling and dealing. At the present rate, soon no one will remember playing in Los Angeles.

Passing Interest

One of their first moves was prompted by the forced retirement of quarterback Chris Miller. After five concussions in 14 months, Miller decided he had banged his head against the wall long enough. The Rams' success mirrored Miller's year. After throwing only three interceptions in the first six games, he threw 12 in the next six and a half. Mark Ryp-en took over in the end and played well enough to deserve consideration for the job.

Can new quarterback Steve Walsh get the ball deep to Isaac Bruce, who led the NFL with 28 plays for more than 20 yards.

After a flurry of trade rumors and a billboard advertising the services of one Randall Cunningham, the Rams settled on the effective and overlooked Steve Walsh from the free-agent pile. Walsh sat on Chicago's bench the entire season. Curiously, he had received no interest as a free agent following his 8-3 record as a starter with the 1994 playoff Bears. His strength is his smart, conservative approach to running whatever offense he is asked to run.

Running Start

Whether Walsh's arm strength is adequate to get the ball deep to Isaac Bruce is questionable, but whoever quarterbacks will have an entirely new supporting cast. It starts with rookie running back Lawrence Phillips, the controversial Nebraska phenom who was the consensus best player in the draft. He slipped to the Rams because he is serving probation after pleading no contest to misdemeanor assault of his former girlfriend. Convinced his future is brighter than his past, the Rams did not hesitate to take the 6-0, 225-pound Phillips, who will be the most scrutinized new player in the league. With 10 draft picks, Brooks took eight offensive players, starting with Phillips, leaving no doubt that last year's collapse was more than Miller's fault.

They were able to plan for the future as well as address immediate needs. In the second round, they made Michigan State's Tony Banks the first quarterback taken in the entire draft. The 6-4, 220-pound Banks is a former pro baseball prospect who played only two years at quarterback and was injured part of last season. He has been compared to Cunningham and the Rams are convinced he is the quarterback of tomorrow.

Wheeling and Dealing

The Rams were able to get Phillips because they traded their 1992 No. 1 pick, defensive tackle Sean Gilbert to the Redskins. Gilbert was expendable because the Rams signed pass-rushing free agent Leslie O'Neal of San Diego. After taking Phillips, the Rams immediately traded their leading rusher, Jerome Bettis, to the Steelers for a second-round choice they used on Washington tight end Ernie Conwell. Then they announced Conwell would be a blocking back for Phillips. After that they picked a squatly running back/blocker in Oklahoma's Jerald Moore, further addressing a running game that finished 25th in the league with a cast of castoffs.

They were able to get Moore with an extra pick from Chicago they received when they traded their own No. 1 to slide down the first round and still had LSU receiver Eddie Kennison. If Phillips doesn't make an immediate impact, Kennison will. The Rams had him rated the third-best player in the entire draft. He seems a perfect complement for Bruce, who led the league with 28 plays for more than 20 yards. Kennison will be the third receiver if he doesn't beat out starter Alexander Wright. If nothing else, Kennison will return punts and kickoffs. At tight end, second-year man Lovell Pinkney, a former wide receiver, could push Troy Drayton whose rookie year was hampered by an ankle sprain. He can play guard or tackle so it depends on how last year's starters—tackles Wayne Gandy and Darryl Ashmore, guards Leo Goeas and Dwayne White and center Bern Brostek—shake out. Interesting projects are second-year free agents John Kirksey and Corey Swinson, former defensive linemen who tip the scales at 350 and 335, respectively. Keith Lonerker, Jesse James, and Chuck Belin are reserves.

Sack Time

O'Neal is the No. 9 all-time sacker and at age 31 is happy to rejoin his former San Diego coach, Rams defensive coordinator Willie Shaw. O'Neal will more than replace Gilbert in the pass rush from right end. He will benefit from playing next to the active D'Marco Farr, the league's second-leading sacker among tackles last year, with 11 1/2. Left end Kevin Carter, last year's No. 1 pick, started every game and registered six sacks. Jimmie Jones is the other tackle with Brad Ottis, Jay William, and Robert Young as line depth.

The Rams signed Robert Jones from Dallas to replace Shane Conlan at middle linebacker. He will play next to the versatile Roman Phifer, who led the team in tackles and passes defended and found time for three sacks and three interceptions. Few outside linebackers are better. Carlos Jenkins mans the other outside spot. Dana Howard, Ashley Sheppard, Cedric Figaro and Tom Homko are backups.

Secondary Traits

Change did not escape the secondary where ex-Patriot Maurice Hurst was signed to replace right cornerback Anthony Parker opposite Todd Lyght. Parker will play nickel back. Safeties Toby Wright and Keith Lyle finished second and third on the team in tackles. Wright's 126 tackles were a team record for a defensive back. Another Nebraska connection. Wright also had six interceptions. Gerald McBurrows, Torin Dorn, Mike Secorlock, Dexter Davis, John Reece, and Claudius Wright will vie for roster spots.

Kicking Game

The Rams are searching for stability at place-kicker. They signed ex-Redskins Chip Lohmiller after Dean Biasucci finished last season. Sean Landeta led the NFC in punting average (44.3) at age 33. Kennison will replace Todd Kinchen in the kick-return department.

Carolina Panthers

After winning seven games in South Carolina, the Panthers will move into their permanent home in North Carolina this year in hopes that the most successful expansion team in NFL history will create more excitement. Traveling to Clemson for the inaugural season produced only one sellout. The Panthers traveled to San Francisco and beat the world champion 49ers for their fourth win in a row and upon returning home a game later, they were greeted by their smallest crowd of the season

Great Expectations

The new stadium in Charlotte has been proclaimed the finest in the NFL by commissioner Paul Tagliabue and the team already is only a couple of games away from the playoffs. So expectations for coach Dom Capers are higher than they are for some franchises 20 and 30 years older

The problem with the Panthers is that their defense is already old. It carried them last year, finishing seventh in the league, but the star is 37-year-old linebacker Sam Mills. Instead of concentrating on a youth movement on defense this off-season, the Panthers bolstered their offense to take pressure off young quarterback Kerry Collins and the burden off Mills and company. The defense gave up only 20.3 points a game, an expansion record, but the offense responded by scoring just 18 per game

Poise and Potential

Once Collins started in game five, the Panthers improved, but they never had the weapons necessary to scare a defense. Preseason moves changed that, especially when Tim Biakabutuka, Michigan's speedy running back, unexpectedly fell to the eighth spot in the draft. Collins became the first rookie quarterback since Dan Marino to win more starts than he lost (7-6). His 2,717 yards passing were more than Drew Bledsoe or Marino had in their first seasons

What Collins didn't do was throw more touchdown passes (14) than interceptions (19). But the poise and potential Collins showed is promising. It's one thing to play quarterback as a rookie, it's quite another to start as a rookie quarterback with an expansion team. With Collins solidly entrenched, the Panthers made changes in their backups, sending Frank Reich and Jack Trudeau packing and adding Steve Beuerlein from the Jaguars and ex-Seahawk Kelly Stouffer from the street

Record Receivers

Collins was surrounded mostly by castoffs. Mark Carrier led the club with 66 catches for 1,002 yards and three touchdowns and Willie Green led the NFC with an average of 18.8 yards per catch. Together they broke records for a receiving tandem in an expansion year. Little Eric Guliford was the third receiver and ex-Bills Don Beebe and tight end Pete Metzelaars contributed only 34 catches between them. General manager Bill Polian addressed that by bringing in Wesley Walls, whose 57 receptions passes last season for the Saints ranked sixth among all tight ends

To push the wideouts, the Panthers drafted big Muhsin Muhammad of Michigan State in the second round. At 6-2, 215,

The Panthers bolstered their offense in the off-season to take pressure off young quarterback Kerry Collins.

Muhammad has the size and at 4'4 3/4 he has the speed. They also added Olympic sprint medalist Michael Bates from the Seahawks and Ray Crittenden from the Patriots and re-signed Dwight Stone, who played only on special teams after catching 152 passes in eight years in Pittsburgh.

Draft Brings Running Backs

Bakabutuka was the first of four running backs drafted by the Panthers, exposing the main problem in the 26th-ranked offense. Bakabutuka came out a year early, but he demonstrated his potential with a 313-yard effort against Ohio State in the season finale. Despite limited football background, the native of Zaire has great acceleration and running instinct.

Howard Griffith, Anthony Johnson, and Bob Christian are the fullback candidates along with sixth-round plunger Scott Greene of Michigan State. Third-rounder Winslow Oliver of New Mexico is a little sprinter with third-down potential. Fifth-rounder Marquette Smith of Central Florida is a short former high school All-American.

Front and Center

The defense welcomed the addition of free agent cornerback Eric Davis from the 49ers, but up front remains a question. Left end Mike Fox earned his big contract and fits perfectly into the attacking 3-4 alignment by stopping the run and applying pressure up the middle. He had a team-high 28 quarterback pressures and led all defensive linemen in every statistical category while setting career marks with 57 tackles, 10 batted passes, and equalling his personal best of 4 1/2 sacks.

Nose tackle Greg Kragen is a war horse who at 34 could use relief for the knees and may get it from third-rounder J.C. Price of Virginia Tech. The right end is open with high hopes for second-year man Shawn King, who contributed as a pass rusher. Gerald Williams and Mark Thomas provide depth.

General Mills

Mills was typically unbelievable in his 10th NFL season. The former Saints' all-pro showed zero signs of slowing down by leading the Panthers in tackles (130), forced fumbles (6) and fumble recoveries (4) and setting career highs in interceptions (5) and sacks (4 1/2). His interception return for a touchdown against the Jets propelled the Panthers to their first victory. He led all NFC inside linebackers in every category except tackles and somehow wasn't voted to the Pro Bowl, a terrible oversight.

Defensive Cornerstones

Davis complements last year's outstanding rookie corner, Tyrone Poole, whose lack of size proved no detriment. Davis replaces Tim McKyer with Rod Smith, Steve Lofton, and Butler By'not'e in reserve, along with fourth-round draft choice Emmanuel McDaniel of East Carolina. Veterans Brett Maxie and Pat Terrell played better than expected at the safeties, with the 33-year-old Maxie enjoying his best season. He was third in the NFC with six interceptions, starting every game and making 105 tackles despite surgery on both knees the previous two seasons. The backups are Bubba McDowell and Chad Cota.

Special Teams

John Kasay was fourth in the NFC in field goals and Tommy Barnhardt punted more times (95) than anyone else in the NFC, a distinct on Collins and the offense would like to eliminate. Guilford was third in the NFC in punt returns and took one back for a touchdown. By'not'e and Stone are the kickoff-return men, but rookie Oliver returned both kickoffs and punts.

Green Bay Packers

For the seventh time in four seasons, the Packers will travel to Texas Stadium to play the Cowboys. So far, they are 0-6. The idea infuriates Packers coach Mike Holmgren, who asked the NFL to explain the scheduling formula to him. The Packers' plight is a freak of nature in a formula that usually makes more sense. That the Packers have played and lost three straight playoff games in Texas Stadium is no fault of the formula. To correct this trend, the Packers simply have to win home-field advantage. "We have to get them on grass," said general manager Ron Wolf.

One Giant Leap

After years of small, steady steps forward, this would be the giant leap for the Packers, a team that is trying to make the most of its current window of opportunity. Reggie

Reggie White made a miraculous comeback from a hamstring injury that was diagnosed as requiring surgery. Could he possibly get any better?

White will be 35 by this season's end. Although the Packers improved dramatically after the departure of the injured Sterling Sharpe, it's hard to imagine similar progress if the team were to lose White. A hamstring injury was diagnosed last season as requiring surgery before White made a miraculous comeback. Could he possibly get any better this year?

The Favre Side

It's a good question for quarterback Brett Favre, too. The runaway MVP of the league, Favre is coming off a spectacular season of 38 touchdown passes and only 13 interceptions. Over the last two seasons, nobody is close to Favre's 71 TD tosses. Steve Young has 55 and Dan Marino 54 over the same period. At the tender age of 26, Favre hasn't approached the physical or mental prime for quarterbacks, so Holmgren and Packer fans expect a bright future indeed. First on Favre's list of things to do, however, is erase the memory of a subpar performance in the Cowboy playoff loss.

Favre is so good that the Packers lost a good backup for the second year in a row when Ty Detmer signed in Philadelphia, following Mark Brunell's exit to Jacksonville. But the Pack re-signed veteran Jim McMahon in case of emergency and like ex-Dolphin Doug Pederson. They also drafted USC's Kyle Wacholtz in the seventh round.

Favorite Targets

Wide receiver Robert Brooks surprised everybody except Favre when he more than adequately replaced Sharpe. After catching only 90 passes in his first three seasons, Brooks reached 102 last season and gained more yards (1,497) than Sharpe ever did in a season. Brooks added 13 touchdowns and endeared himself to Lambeau Field fans by jumping into the end zone stands in celebration.

Brooks shared the spotlight with eight other players who caught touchdown passes as Favre spread around the glory. This year, there will be others. Gone is last year's No. 2 wide receiver, Mark Ingram, likely to be replaced by either Anthony Morgan or second-year prospect Antonio Freeman. Terry Mckens is another prospect who will get a look, and don't count out second-round draft choice Derrick Mayes of Notre Dame, a good-sized big-play receiver the Packers say reminds them somewhat of Sharpe. Prospect Charles Jordan signed with Miami and was replaced by veteran Don Beebe on the training camp roster.

Favre's second-favorite target is tight end Mark Chmura, whose 54 catches for seven touchdowns was comparable to the 61 catches by outlet receiver Edgar Bennett and the 48 by fullback Dorsey Levens. Chmura was thrust into action after the Packers fared until late in the season to convince Keith Jackson to report. Chmura then kept Jackson to spot duty and made the Pro Bowl.

Among the Elite

Bennett was outstanding after moving from fullback to tailback. His 1,067 yards rushing and 648 yards receiving gave him a team-record 1,715 and puts him among the elite all-purpose backs in the game. The Packers love his adaptability to bad weather. The Packers drafted Minnesota's speedy Chris Darkns as a change-of-pace back and hope to have better luck than they did with LeShon Johnson. First, Darkns would have to beat out second-year prospect Travis Jervey, who is bidding for playing time. Levens had a good year at fullback and William Henderson is coming off a rookie knee injury and could push for time.

Line Change

The line will undergo some change, depending on the recovery rate of budding guard Aaron Taylor, who suffered his second serious injury in three seasons. Gary Brown is a guard/tackle who could serve as Taylor's sub. Replacement Adam Timmerman figures as the successor to Harry Galbreath at the other guard. Frank Winters is the center and Ken Ruettggers and Earl Dotson are entrenched at the tackles.

The Packers spent their first draft choice on USC's John Michels, the heir apparent to the 34-year-old Ruettggers. They also spent a third on UCLA center Mike Flanagan and a sixth on Penn State guard Marco Rivera. Lindsay Knapp and Mike Arthur are reserves.

One for the Bookends

The Packers had the best defense in the NFC Central Division but only the sixth-best in the NFC, a situation defensive coordinator Fritz Shurmur would like to improve. With White and 33-year-old Sean Jones as the ends, the foundation is solid. Filling in the rest is the trick. White's 12 sacks and Jones's 9 were the best in the NFC by two ends. They are now the first team in the history of sacks to field two players with more than 100 career sacks.

Adding Santana Dotson from Tampa Bay to replace John Jurkovic at one tackle will improve the pass rush considerably. Dotson had five sacks last year. The real key to improvement, however, may be the development of 340-pound Gilbert Brown, who looked so good at a mini-camp that Shurmur called him an "awesome force." He has been slowed by knee and elbow surgeries. Gabe Wilkins and Matt LaBounty are competent backups at ends and second-year players Darius Holland, Shannon Clavelle and Bob Kuberski are backups inside.

Behind the Front

The Packers lost middle linebacker Fred Strickland to Dallas and wanted to sign Buf falo's Cornelius Bennett. They settled for the Bears' Ron Cox, who has never played in the middle. The Packers think he is strong enough to do it and Cox is winning, especially behind the beefy front the Packers field. Wayne Simmons came on at the end of last year as a force at strongside linebacker and had a career game in the playoff victory over the 49ers. George Koonce is the starter on the weak side with Bernardo Harris, Brian Williams, and Robert Bass the backups.

Defensive Backfield

In the secondary, free safety George Teague is coming off a disappointing third season. Lenny McGill was moved from corner to safety. Second-year man Roderick Mullen also is a free safety. Strong safety LeRoy Butler is the best playmaker of the bench and led the team with five interceptions. Veteran Mike Prior is the backup. Cornerbacks Doug Evans and Craig Newsome experimented at free safety before training camp but are entrenched at the corners. Newsome had a fine rookie season. Third-rounder Tyrone Williams of Nebraska will join McGill and Keith Crawford in the reserve picture.

Happy Returns

Chris Jacke is an excellent bad-weather kicker, perfect for the Packers. Craig Hentrich is outstanding on punts and kickoffs. Freeman and Jervoy returned kicks last year and Freeman broke a punt for a touchdown in a playoff victory against Atlanta.

The Bears plan to concentrate more on ball control with Rashaan Salaam, who led all NFC rookies in rushing.

Chicago Bears

As the only winning team (9-7) left out of the playoffs last season, the Bears feel they are closer than most also-rans to a significant breakthrough. "All the pieces are in place," coach Dave Wannstedt said.

Picking Up the Pieces

The first order of business is to pick up the pieces left by four devastating losses in a row to archrival Green Bay. Last year, the Bears scored 52 points in two games against the Packers, only to lose both in a barrage of eight touchdown passes by Brett Favre. At least they got closer than they did the year before, when the Packers overwhelmed the Bears in two games 73-9.

The Packers aren't the only hurdle. The Bears lost twice last year to NFC Central Division rival Detroit when receiver Herman Moore caught 20 of his record 123 passes. Such defensive letdowns are embarrassments to Wannstedt, who addressed them in the off season. He knows to get to Dallas or San Francisco, he has to go through Green Bay and Detroit.

Priorities

First, the Bears made controversial Miami linebacker Bryan Cox their No. 1 free-agent priority and landed him with a four-year, $13.2 million deal that included a $5 million signing bonus. Then they traded up in the first round of the draft for the first time in 20 years to land Mississippi State cornerback Walt Harris.

Clearly, defense is the priority. Wannstedt made it known that while he was happy with the 29 touchdown passes thrown last season by Erik Kramer, he no longer intends to get into shootouts in his division. Kramer's TD numbers were fourth in the entire league, but also fourth in the division. Kramer's efficiency was underscored by only 15 sacks and a passer rating that ranked him fourth in the league.

The Bears' confidence in Kramer became apparent when they let backup Steve Walsh escape to St. Louis, leaving only untested Steve Stenstrom and Shane Matthews behind him. Walsh led the Bears to the playoffs in 1994 when Kramer lost his job following a shoulder injury, but Kramer was the only quarterback to take all of his team's snaps last season.

Ball Control

To make certain the Bears wouldn't join their pass-happy neighbors, the Bears let leading receiver Jeff Graham go in free agency to the Jets. The idea is to concentrate more on the ball-control attack that second-year running back Rashaan Salaam can provide. Salaam led all NFC rookies with 1,074 yards and 10 touchdowns, but nine fumbles kept him off the field at crucial times. His development is expected to be speeded by the return of fullback Raymont Harris from a broken collarbone and the challenge of change-of-pace back Robert Green, whose 5.3-yard average was second only to Philadelphia's Charlie Garner. Tony Carter caught 40 passes subbing for Harris at fullback.

Deep Threat

Kramer still has speedy Curtis Conway, who caught 12 touchdown passes, and Michael Timpson as his deep threats. After watching last year's fourth-round draft choice, Jack Jackson, and this year's second choice, Bobby Engram, perform in mini-camp, Wannstedt had second thoughts about trying to add a veteran to the mix to help make up for Graham's 82 catches. Jackson spent last season on injured reserve and Engram was a pleasant addition after a big-play, big-time career at Penn State. The Bears believe he is the perfect cold-weather producer who will fit in as a third receiver if not push for a starting job.

Tight end is a question Bears offensive coordinator Ron Turner expects to answer by committee. Keith Jennings is the blocker, but his six touchdown catches in only 25 receptions indicates he can be an effective threat. Chris Gedney hasn't enjoyed a healthy season in three years but he could provide a deep threat. Andre President and Ryan Wetnight are reserves

Lining Up

The Bears feel comfortable on the offensive line despite losing starting right guard Jay Leeuwenburg, reserve left tackle Troy Auzenne to Indianapolis, third-string tackle Scott Adams to Tampa Bay and center Jerry Fontenot to the saary cap. Tackles Andy Heck and James Williams are solid bookends. Left guard Todd Perry is on the verge of league-wide recognition. Ed Cunningham was signed from Arizona to play center. Line coach Tony Wase says second-year guard Octus Polk reminds him of the Cowboys' Nate Newton. But Polk will have to beat out second-year man Evan Pilgrom and third-year man Todd Burger for Leeuwenburg's spot. Draft choices Chris Villarral of Indiana (PA) and Jon Clark of Temple and former second-round pick Marcus Spears are backups.

Retooled Front

Cox's signing not only changed the line-backing look, it retooled the front four. The Bears matched an offer from Jacksonville to keep left end Alonzo Speman and will move him to his former position on the right side. Third-year man John Thierry will move from right to left end and try to hold up against the run. On passing downs, Speman will slide from right end to tackle and allow Cox to move to right end. Cox led the Dolphins in sacks last year with 7 1/2. The tackles are Jim Flanagan, who led the Bears with 11 sacks as a second-year man, and Chris Zorich. Draft also will make a run at a starting job. Myron Baker is another versatile backup.

Secondary

Rookie Walt Harris, the fastest Bear at mini-camp, immediately moves into a starting spot at right cornerback, replacing Jeremy Lincoln and Kevin Minsfield, who will vie with James Burton and Kenny Gales for reserve and nickel jobs. Left cornerback Donnell Woodford is coming off a hip injury and is expected to return to Pro Bowl form. Strong safety Marty Carter should feel more comfortable in his second year with the Bears. He led the team with 158 tackles and hopes he gets more help. Free safety Mark Carrier went without an interception and has only eight in five years since leading the league with 10 as a rookie. Backing up are John Mangum, Anthony Marshall, and Dwayne Joseph.

Room for Improvement

Improvement in special teams is a must if the Bears are to contend. Last year's second-round punter, Todd Sauerbrun, finished a disappointing last in the league after sensational previews. Veteran kicker Kevin Butler, the team's only holdover from the 1985 champions, connected on only two of six field goals from more than 40 yards. Overall, he hit 23 of 31 attempts and scored 114 points. Ingram will offer instant improvement in kick returns.

Detroit Lions

Wayne Fontes became the winningest coach in Lions' history last season. Trouble is, live more losses and he is also the losingest coach in Lions' history. In Detroit fans tend to keep track of the latter more than the former.

Wayne's Whirl

Win or lose, Fontes can't seem to win. He starts the 1996 season on the hottest seat in the NFL, with a mandate from owner William Clay Ford to get past the first round of the playoffs that has tripped up the Lions three years in a row. To some observers, Fontes will be fortunate to last until the playoffs, but that pessimism may be left over from last year, when Fontes fooled everybody with his greatest Houdini act yet.

After a 3-6 start, Ford issued a playoffs-or-else order. So the Lions ran the table, winning seven in a row as their No. 1-ranked offense looked unstoppable. But they lost playoff game No. 1 to the Eagles by the wild score of 58-37. It was a stunning defeat, undoing everything the Lions had accomplished during their remarkable run. When Ford said Fontes would be back this year, the reaction in Detroit was not joyous.

In a quest for more speed on defense, the Lions let linebacker Chris Spielman get away to the Buffalo Bills in free agency. Spielman was in many ways the glue that held a volatile team together. Likewise, the Lions said good-bye to offensive leader Lomas Brown, their long-time Pro Bowl left tackle. Somehow the addition by subtraction doesn't add up.

Great Scott

If the Lions are to thrive again, their offense will have to carry them again. That means quarterback Scott Mitchell will have to prove his outstanding season was no fluke. Mitchell finished third in the league in touchdown passes, with 32, breaking the team record held by Bobby Layne, who threw 26 in four fewer games.

Surrounded by great skill players, Mitchell did a great job of distributing the ball and keeping everyone happy. It wasn't until nearly midseason that the Lions decided to make the three wide-receiver set their basic offense, but when they did, Mitchell found the open targets consistently. He threw only 12 interceptions. In the playoff game, however, Mitchell turned wild and was benched by Fontes in favor of backup Don Majkowski, not a happy memory for a team that wants to build on the positives.

Detroit Catches On

Wide receivers Herman Moore and Brett Perriman set the NFL record with an astonishing 231 catches between them. It was amazing that Mitchell found third receiver Johnnie Morton 44 times and still had time to hit Barry Sanders 48 times. This year, the Lions plan to utilize tight end David Soan more, but how he might fit into an already overcrowded cast is difficult to imagine. The Lions became the first to have a quarterback throw for more than 4,000 yards and have a receiver catch for more than 1,500 yards and a running back rush for 1,500 yards, all in the same year. To add to the firepower, the Lions traded for Denver's Glyn Milburn, a little receiver/running back/return specialist.

Sanders' Kernel

Sanders gained an even 1,500 yards for his seventh straight 1,000-yard season, putting him over the 10,000 mark. He joined Eric Dickerson as the only backs to break the 1,000-yard mark in each of their first seven pro seasons. That he failed to break 100 for the last five games, including the playoff, was a minor blip in the big picture. Sanders' 48 catches were a career high and added yet another dimension to the attack. The Lions would love to have defenses start ignoring Sanders to stop Moore and Pernman. Backup Eric Lynch is back after missing most of last season with a stress fracture. Cory Schlesinger and Ron Rivers are second-year special-teamers.

Unquiet Front

The Lions are in a rebuilding mode up front. They signed Ray Roberts from Seattle to replace Brown, but Roberts has a long way to go to reach Brown's level. They drafted Penn State's Jeff Hartings in the first round to play either guard or center, and there are plenty of openings. They lost guard Doug Widell to Indianapolis and cut David Lutz. Center Kevin Glover's contract status is unclear. Zefross Moss is the right tackle and Mike Compton looks like a starter at either guard or center. Otherwise, it's first come, first served. Hartings looks like a sure thing wherever he lines up. Tony Sempie, Jeff Jones, Scott Conover, and Hessler Hempstead are backups.

The Line on the Lions

The defensive line is in similar transition as the Lions scramble with new combinations to surround tackle Henry Thomas. Fontes was forced to fire defensive coordinator Herb Paterra and replace him with Jim Eddy after the front seven were playing attack football and the secondary was playing soft for much of last season. After finishing his rookie season with no sacks, Luther Elliss is expected to move from left end to tackle, switching with Robert Porcher. Tracy Scroggins is the right end, with Mike Wells, Shane Bonham, and fifth-round rookie Kerwin Wadrop fighting for time. Thomas had his best year with 10 1/2 sacks, somehow avoiding double teams to win the club defensive MVP honors. Scroggins had 9 1/2 sacks.

Changes at Linebacker

Mike Johnson is the only returning starter at linebacker, as Antonio London is slated to replace Tracy Hayworth and ex-Giant Michael Brooks was signed to replace Spielman. But the Lions might want to find room for No. 1 draft choice Reggie Brown of Texas A&M. The fastest linebacker in the draft, Brown can cover and cause problems in the pass rush. Since the Lions traded up to get him, he is unlikely to sit on the bench long. Scott Kowalkowski is a veteran backup.

Speed in the Secondary

Changes in the secondary also are designed to improve speed. Losing safety Willie Clay and his eight interceptions to the Patriots isn't exactly what they had in mind, but third-year man Van Malone should be ready to step in. To protect against the loss of hard-hitting safety Bennie Blades, the Lions drafted hard-hitting safety Ryan Stewart of Georgia Tech, and have second-year man Ron Rice in reserve. At cornerback, Ryan McNeil and Corey Raymond are the starters with Sean Vanhorse, Jocelyn Borgella, Richard Woodley, and skinny fourth-rounder Brad Ford of Alabama as backups. The Lions could use more depth as well as speed in the secondary, especially in a division that lives by the pass.

Kicking Game

Jason Hanson hit 28 of 34 field goals and can still boom kickoffs. Mark Royals had an average year punting. Milburn was brought in to give the team its first return threat since Mel Gray.

Minnesota Vikings

From the 1993 defense that ranked No. 1 in the league, the only Viking left is tackle John Randle. If you don't think free agency and the salary cap make a difference, consider the Vikings. A 91 percent turnover in three seasons is not the conventional way to build cohesion. The numbers don't count coach Dennis Green's trusty defensive coordinator, Tony Dungy, now head man in Tampa Bay.

Starting Over

Randle's loneliness could get worse this season unless several young players step up fast. Randle could be surrounded by two rookies and a second-year player on the defensive line. Green isn't shy about thrusting youth into his lineup. He had four rookies starting last year: so first- and second-rounders Duane Cammons and James

A threat to score on every play, Robert Smith led the Vikes in rushing despite missing seven games with a bad ankle.

Manley figure to see plenty of opportunity as soon as they report. Green didn't make the playoffs for the first time in his four seasons as head coach, but it wasn't because the Vikings are getting old.

If they need an excuse, here's one: The starters missed 42 games because of injury. By contrast, Green Bay's regulars missed only nine games. One starter who missed none was veteran quarterback Warren Moon, the first Viking quarterback since 1979 to start all 16 weeks.

Moon Shines

Despite his age, Moon is coming off one of the best seasons. His 33 touchdown passes were second in the league to Green Bay's Brett Favre. Moon got better as he got older, throwing 23 touchdown passes and only five interceptions over the last half of the season. With the burden of a trial over domestic problems behind him, Moon is expected to pick up where he left off. Although he turns 40 in November, Moon is on the verge of surpassing every quarterback who played well at an advanced age including George Blanda and Sonny Jurgensen. Brad Johnson is the only backup with any NFL snaps. Chad May is the second-year quarterback on the roster.

Catching On

Pat and catch is what the Vikings do best. Another player who is getting better is Cris Carter, whose back-to-back 122-catch seasons are unprecedented. Carter's 17 touchdown receptions were 10 more than he had in 1994 and led the league. Disappointed with Moon for not enabling him to pass Detroit's Herman Moore in the final game, Carter finished one catch shy of Moore who broke Carter's league record.

Carter could be even more effective this year as the Vikings attempt to diversify their attack. Jake Reed's 72 catches were off his pace of 85 from the previous year and Qadry Ismail's 32 were off his number of 45. Likewise, the tight ends caught fewer passes. That's because running back Amp Lee increased his receptions from 45 to 71 as Moon developed patience and found outlet receivers.

David Palmer, who led the league in punt returns, is expected to make a significant contribution in the passing game this year provided offensive coordinator Brian Billick can make room in the game plan for a game-breaker. At tight end, Andrew Jordan is expected to carry a load increased by the welcome departure of Adnan Cooper to San Francisco. Greg DeLong is the backup and a better blocker. The Vikings also took huge 6-5, 280-pound Hunter Goodwin of Texas A&M-Kingsville in the fourth round.

On the Run

What would help Moon most of all is a dependable running attack. Accused of ignoring the run, Green points to injuries that have thus far ruined the career of swift Robert Smith. Despite missing seven games with a bad ankle, the frail Smith led the club with 632 yards. His presence changes the Vikings entirely, because he is a threat to score on every play. His absence, however, is what the Vikings have come to expect. In three seasons, he has rushed only 252 times, hardly the load for a feature back.

Although Lee is an excellent receiver, he doesn't have the speed to be an every-down rusher. Fullback-type Scottie Graham always pays well when called upon, which is usually in December. Charles Evans is a fullback. Second-year prospects James Stewart and Bobby Phillips will get long looks to see if they can become the next Terry Allen. Most intriguing is rookie Moe Williams of Kentucky, a big-time producer who led the SEC in rushing as a third-year junior and came out early. The Vikings even compare his style to Allen's.

Line Stability

After considerable shuffling, the offensive line appears set and steady. Thrown into the fire as the second-youngest player in the league, right tackle Korey Stringer replaced the injured Chris Hinton and quickly lived up to his billing. Left tackle Todd Steussie has started every game as a Viking and Jeff Christy begins his third year at center. John Gerak started the last six games of 1995 and established himself at right guard. That leaves left guard Randall McDaniel, a first-team All-Pro for the seventh straight year. Everett Lindsay and David Dixon are backups with experience.

Interior Rush

Randle's defense won't be bad as long as Randle is in it. Over the past five seasons, he has led NFL interior rushers with 57 1/2 sacks. Only ends Leslie O'Neal (63), Reggie White (62), and Neil Smith (61) have more. Without Henry Thomas beside him last year, Randle's sacks decreased from 13 1/2 to 10 1/2, still significant production. But a man can't keep losing his friends and neighbors and feel good about it.

Losing left end Roy Barker to the 49ers leaves Fernando Smith as the heir apparent, but the addition of Clemons and Manley signal an overhaul. Right end Derrick Alexander, last year's No. 1 pick, was limited by a late signing and registered only two sacks while starting the final 12 games. Randle's sidekick at nose tackle, Esera Tuaolo, played fairly well in place of Thomas but is recovering from an Achilles injury. Pass rusher Martin Harrison came on with five sacks in the final four games, so he figures in the mix. Clemons is a 6-5, 260-pounder who played better at linebacker in college at Cal but looks like he can grow into a pro end. He could move Alexander to the left side. Vanderbilt's 315-pound Manley already has grown into the prototype nose tackle.

Fitting In

A knee injury cost middle linebacker Jack Del Rio his job after a good run in Minnesota. He was replaced by the surprising Jeff Brady. Broderick Thomas didn't fit at outside linebacker, just as he didn't fit in Detroit and Tampa Bay and made his way to Dallas. The Vikings were happy to sign free agent Dixon Edwards from the Cowboys in his place and believe Edwards's speed will enable him to play every down. Ed McDaniel is the second-best player on the defense. He led the team with 136 tackles, 19 1/2 for losses. If Clemons is a better linebacker than end, McDaniel or Edwards could move inside.

Youthful Look

The youngest secondary in the league will benefit by better play up front. Free safety Orlando Thomas led the league with nine interceptions and fellow rookie Corey Fuller won a starting job at cornerback. Second-year corner Dewayne Washington didn't play as well as he did as a rookie and must rebound in 1996. Strong safety Harlon Barnett is the old man at age 28. Donald Frank, Alfred Jackson, and Robert Griffith are the backups.

Special Players

Fuad Reviez set an NFL record with his 31st field goal in a row. Mike Saxon has landed more punts inside the 20 since 1985 than anyone else. Palmer's league-leading punt return average (13.2 yards) is complemented by Ismail's second-place kickoff average in the NFC (24.7), giving the Vikings very good special teams.

Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Tony Dungy waited a long time for a chance to become a head coach. He has much in common with his team. The Buccaneers have waited a long time to win.

By avoiding a 13th consecutive double-digit losing season last year, fired coach Sam Wyche actually went out on a high note.

Accepting the Challenge

Dungy was hired after the Bucs made runs at Jimmy Johnson and Steve Spurrier. But if Dungy wasn't the team's first choice, that is the least of his problems. He arrives with impeccable credentials and takes over a locker room that allegedly includes some talent, but the unsettled state of the franchise location and stadium deal became yet another hurdle to overcome during an offseason of trying to sign and re-sign free agents. It is difficult to sell players on a future with so many questions unanswered, such as: "Where are we going to play?"

Dungy greeted the challenge head-on, making no apologies and serving up no excuses. "I don't think you can look at a team that won seven ball games as a rebuilding team," Dungy said. "I feel like we're coming into a very good situation. Our goal is to come down here and win. I don't expect the fans to be patient. I don't think they're going to have to live through two or three years of us not winning. We're going to be sound and solid, and we're going to win a lot of ball games."

On Draft

That said, Dungy lost two pretty good defensive tack es in free agency—Santana Dotson to Green Bay and Mark Wheeler to New England—and had to spend both his No. 1 draft choices to do what the Buccaneers have tried to do for years—build a defensive line. And with his only productive running back, Ernie Rhett, skipping mini-camps while trying to renegotiate a contract, Dungy spent a second-round pick on a fullback.

Passing the Bucs

The chances for Dungy to make a playoff run in his first year rest largely on third-year quarterback Trent Diler, who has plenty of room for improvement. While his NFC Central Division counterparts were tearing up the league with touchdown passes (132 among the four of them), Diler threw only four. Juxtaposed against 18 interceptions, Diler wound up with the league's worst passer rating and argued with Wyche for benching him in the season finale.

The chances for a playoff run rest largely on quarterback Trent Diler, who has plenty of room for improvement.

"I think Trent has a lot of things going for him," Dungy said. "I think he has some things you can't coach and I'm looking forward to working with him."

For the things you can coach, the Bucs hired former Bears' assistant Mike Shula as offensive coordinator. Only 31 and without coordinator experience, Shula proves that Shulas do not shy away from challenges. Casey Weldon and Kelly Holcomb are the backups.

Sharing the Load

After gaining 1,207 yards last year, Rhett felt he deserved more money. His 3.6-yard average is below norm, but his 332 carries put him in the workhorse category. The Bucs plan to distribute the carries more this year by ditching the one-back attack for more two-back sets, and drafting classic power back Mike Alstott from Purdue is the first sign that Rhett's role will be divided. Alstott does it all: runs, blocks, and catches. Seattle pickup Tracy Johnson, Jerry Ellison, and Dave Moore are other running backs.

On Target

Tight end Jackie Harris was the Bucs' leading receiver last year, the only tight end in the NFL to lead his team in catches. With big blocker Tyji Armstrong as a counterpart, the Bucs have as good a tandem at that position as there is in the league. Better play at wide receiver would help. Alvin Harper was a disappointment coming from the Cowboys. Although he caught a career-high 46 passes, he scored only twice and didn't make as many big plays as he made among the Dallas superstars. But if the Bucs are to make strides in this area, Harper will have to make them. Lawrence Dawsey is a tough possession receiver. Horace Copeland was the deep threat with a 17.3-yard average on 35 catches. Resigning Courtney Hawkins helps giving Diller four experienced targets plus Harris. All except Hawkins are over 6-0.

On the Line

The offensive line is in need of some regrouping. Diller was sacked 47 times second only to Arizona's Dave Krieg (53). Charles McRae joined the list of Bucca-neer busts among No. 1 draft choices and signed with Oakland. The Bucs' former A-Pro left tackle, Paul Gruber, played with a shoulder injury and was sub-par. The Bucs signed well-traveled reserve Scott Adams from the Bears to fill a hole at right tackle. Adams only blocked for kicks in Chicago. If he can play full-time, Scott Diller is expected to move to left guard. Right guard Ian Beckles and center Tony Mayberry are fixtures at their positions and Gruber is solid when healthy. Pete Person, Jim Pyne, and Stephen Ingram are reserves. Fourth-round draft choice Jason Odom of Florida has played both tackles and will get every opportunity to move right into the lineup.

Front Four

After considering a blockbuster trade for Arizona defensive tackle Eric Swann, the Bucs stayed with their draft choices and hope the luck changes. Their 1993 No. 1 pick, right end Eric Curry, registered his only two sacks of last season in the final game and probably will move to the left side to replace Chidi Ahanotu. But it depends on the quick development of No. 1 draft pick Regan Upshaw of California. Pinning hopes on draft choices, even high ones, to make a dramatic difference in the pass rush is always risky business.

Warren Sapp, last year's No. 1 pick, did not play at tackle as well as advertised and expects a much better sophomore season. The Bucs made North Carolina's Marcus Jones their second No. 1 pick this year to team with Sapp, so the front four will be young if nothing else. Brad Culpepper shared playing time with Wheeler last year. Herman Smith is another backup.

Defensive Core

The Bucs re-signed Hardy Nickerson at middle linebacker to keep the core of their defense intact. Nickerson was in on 64 more tackles than anybody else on the defense, an unusual gap. New defensive coordinator Monte Kiffin will try to get more people involved. Second-year man Derrick Brooks made as many plays as any other rookie outside linebacker last season and Lonnie Marts played well at the other outside position. Demetrious DuBose, Ed Brady, Wardell Rouse, and Darnell Stephens provide the depth, but Rouse and Stephens are only second-year men.

Youth Corps

Dungy isn't afraid of youth anywhere on defense. His Vikings had three rookies starting last season, including two in the secondary. The Bucs finished last season with rookies Tony Boue and Melvin Johnson as the starting safeties because of injuries to John Lynch and Barney Bussey. The Bucs drafted three defensive backs, starting with East Tennessee State's Donnie Abraham, a corner who will vie for playing time with second-year men Jerry Wilson and Clifton Abraham behind starters

Martin Mayhew and Charles Dimry. Tony Stargell, last year's nickel back, could get pushed. Reserve safeties are Todd Scott, Thomas Everett, and Kenneth Gant.

Kicking Game

Michael Husted has the kind of kicking leg that makes coaches drool. He was 8 for 12 beyond 40 yards and perfect in three attempts over 50. Punter Reggie Roby remains effective at age 35. Bobby Joe Edmunds made a remarkable comeback as a return man.

There was enough player movement to effect the division races. Look for the Supercharged Buffalo Bills to be back on top.

by LARRY FELSER BUFFALO NEWS

Super Bowls may be won by the NFC in January, but in the AFC there is a tradition of flinging laurel wreaths at some conquering-hero-to-be long before Labor Day. Two years ago it was Bill Parcells, who came into New England on a zephyr of enthusiasm. Last year it was Don Shula after the Dolphins spent $19 million on free agents.

This year, conventional wisdom bestows the laurel wreaths on Jimmy Johnson, expecting that he will succeed in Miami in the post-Shula era as he succeeded in Dallas in the post-Tom Landry era. The problem is that conventional wisdom, AFC version, has been getting cut off at the knees.

One-Man Gang

Parcells, after an encouraging beginning with the Patriots, fizzled in 1995. So did Shula and his big-name free agents. There is a common thread which Parcells and Shula share with J.J.: the one-man-gang syndrome. All three are accustomed to operating every aspect of the business, from the offensive system employed by the team to the final judgment on talent, as well as everything in between.

In the era of free agency and salary cap, the big-cheese approach doesn't work any longer, even though a number of teams still try it. Miami, with Johnson, is the most prominent in the AFC, along with Denver with Mike Shanahan, Jacksonville with Tom Coughlin, Seattle with Dennis Erickson, and even the woebegone New York Jets with Rich Kotite, whose personally supervised drafts were a disaster in Philadelphia. Two AFC teams, New England and Baltimore, decided after last season that "full control" in the hands of any coach was an idea whose time had passed.

The Patriots shifted final personnel decisions from Parcells to Bobby Grier. The upshot that Parcells was truly no longer in charge came in April when the Pats signed restricted free agent linebacker Monte Brown from Buffalo for far more than the Bills were willing to pay him. In the draft, the Pats took Tedy Bruschi, Arizona's outstanding defensive end who will be converted to a rush linebacker.

In the past, when acquiring linebackers, Parcells used to have a profile to which he rigidly adhered. They all had to be at least 6-3 and 250 pounds. His great linebacking crew on the Super Bowl champion New York Giants set the standard: Lawrence Taylor, Carl Banks, Pepper Johnson, Gary Reasons, and even their backups met Parcells' favored profile. Brown, at 5-11, and Bruschi, barely over 6-0, are what Parcells used to call "midgets."

In Baltimore, owner Art Modell opted for division of powers, promoting his one-time star tight end, Ozzie Newsome, to personnel chief. There was recognition in the franchise's new city that while Ted Marchibroda's greatest assets are his ability to deal with players and get them to perform for him, his weakness is judgment of talent. That's what got him fired in Baltimore in 1979 when he coached the Colts.

Conversely, since free agency began, the most successful AFC teams are organizations with strict division of powers: Buffalo, with general manager John Butler and personnel director Dwight Adams in concert with coach Marv Levy, Pittsburgh with director of football Tom Donahoe, and personnel chief Tom Modrak in concert with credited with much of the Steelers' push to the AFC championship, offensive coordinator Ron Erhardt was fired by Cowher. Erhardt barely folded his pink slip when the New York Jets hired him to run their refurbished attack. Belichick was hired as New England's defensive coordinator by his old boss, Parcells. Cowher promoted Chan Gailey to replace Erhardt in Pittsburgh.

Free Agents

There was enough significant free-agent movement to effect the division races. Pittsburgh lost quarterback Neil O'Donnell to the Jets and linebacker Kevin Greene to Carolina. Jacksonville also raided the Steelers for All-Pro right tackle Leon Searcy and followed that by signing Green Bay defensive tackle John Jurkovic and acquiring San Diego power back Natrone Means.

Miami lost three defensive starters: controversial linebacker Bryan Cox to the Bears, cornerback Troy Vincent to Philadelphia, and end Marco Coleman to San Diego. Buffalo lost all-star linebacker Cornelius Bennett to Atlanta but raided the NFC for New Orleans receiver Quinn Early receivers available. The Jets used the No. 1 pick for Keyshawn Johnson of USC, considered the NFL's next great receiver. New England selected Terry Glenn of Ohio State, Indianapolis took Marvin Harrison of Syracuse, and Buffalo tabbed Eric Moulds of Mississippi State.

Last year, Miami lost the AFC East to Miami in a late-season showdown in which the Bills ran for 208 yards. Two weeks later, Buffalo blew the Dolphins out of the playoffs with 341 yards on the ground, the greatest postseason infantry onslaught since the Chicago Bears decimated the Washington Redskins, 73-0, in the 1940 NFL title game.

Consequently, Johnson made Darryl Gardener, Bayor's 6-6, 327-pound defensive tackle more noted for his potential than his production, Miami's first-round draft pick. Gardener will be stationed next to 315-pound Tim Bowens in the Dolphins' line. Johnson also drafted 300-pound Shane Burton of Tennessee. He already had 330-pound Norman Hand on board. The hefty quartet may constitute a critical mass against the running game.

The AFC rookie crop also includes the most acclaimed college defender, Illinois linebacker Kevin Hardy, taken by Jacksonville, and the Heisman Trophy winner, Ohio State running back Eddie George, now a Houston Oiler.

Coaching Changes

When it changed coaches after last season, the AFC leaned toward baseball's long tradition. That is, the vacancies were filled by men with track records as NFL head coaches, just as baseball recycles its managers. Besides the return of Johnson, ex-Green Bay coach Lindy Infante takes over the Indianapolis Colts, who missed the Super Bowl by one failed Hail Mary pass and then promptly fired Marchibroda. After the former Cleveland Browns changed cities, they changed coaches, dumping Bill Belichick and hiring Marchibroda.

There were three major changes of coordinators in the conference which could effect pennant races as much as the signing of big-name free agents. Despite being and Detroit linebacker Chris Spielman, San Diego lost pass rusher Leslie O'Neal to St. Louis and versatile running back Ronnie Harmon to Houston. The Raiders signed two Dallas starters: defensive tackle Russell Maryland and cornerback and Super Bowl MVP Larry Brown.

Quarterback remains the Steelers' dilemma, but they did rebound in the market by signing offensive lineman Wil Woelford of Indianapolis and trading for St. Louis running back Jerome Bettis.

assigned them to the has-been pile. Wade Phillips was hired to put some zest in the pass rush, Bryce Paup, Ted Washington, and Jim Jeffcoat were signed as free agents, and the Bills went from being passive to the leading sackers in the NFL, with 49. They also recaptured their division championship.

Newcomers

This winter they made more helpful moves, signing wide receiver Quinn Early, who caught 163 passes for New Orleans the last two years, and then adding linebacker Chris Spielman, Detroit's happy warrior. On the other hand they lost Cornelius Bennett, probably the best coverage linebacker in the league, to Atlanta.

Spielman gives Buffalo a strength it has been lacking, an ability to shut down the inside running game. Curtis Martin, New

Buffalo Bills

The Bills are still brooding about what could have been. This time it was the playoff game against the Steelers in Pittsburgh last January when Bruce Smith, their best defensive player, was marked absent because of the flu and a 103-degree temperature. Buffalo cut its deficit to five points early in the fourth quarter and seemed to have the Steelers on the run. Then Neil O'Donnell had enough time to get off a high pass which Yancey Thigpen caught with an acrobatic leap, and another Buffalo dream dissolved.

"If I had been there," said Smith, "we would have won." The Bills think they have done enough this year to get there, that is, all the way back to the Super Bowl, provided there are no 103-degree temperatures in the way.

Regaining the Lead

The Bills made an amazing comeback a year ago after just about everyone had England's rookie sensation, battered the Bills twice last year. Buffalo also has to deal with Indianapolis's Marshall Faulk twice a season. This year's schedule includes dates against Emmitt Smith of Dallas, Kijana Carter of Cincinnati, Chris Warren of Seattle, Jerome Bettis of Pittsburgh, and the Giants' duo of Rodney Hampton and Tyrone Wheatley, all essentially tackle-to-tackle runners, an area where Spielman still excels. Spielman has to be lifted on third-down, but Phillips has a backlog of young defensive backs with whom he could arrive at a creative solution.

Solid Core

The newcomers will help, but the Bills still win with their core stars from the Super Bowl seasons. Jim Kelly at quarterback, Thurman Thomas at running back, Bruce Smith at defensive end, special-teams ace Steve Tasker, and an offensive line that has been strengthened on the run.

It was an upset that Kelly played all of the last regular season without injury because he is a still life in the passing pocket. He completed over 55 percent of his passes for 3,130 yards and 22 touchdowns with 13 interceptions. Kelly did suffer a separated sternum and collarbone in the playoff loss to the Steelers. He underwent off-season surgery and says he's pain-free. Kelly is 36 and no more mobile, but he is the key to Buffalo's season. If the Bills can keep him together again, they could go far.

All on the Line

The key to Kelly's health is the reupholstered offensive line. The Bills made left tackle John Fina their franchise player in order to keep him. Rookie Ruben Brown was such a success playing next to Fina that at the end of the season, Don Shula called him "the best guard in the league." Ageless center Kent Hull still ranks among the best at his position. Glenn Parker flourished after his move from right guard to right tackle. Jerry Ostroski split right guard with Corbin Lacina most of last season, but Ostroski played well enough to handle the job by himself when it came to the playoffs. The line became dominant in December

In Passing

The passing game needs refueling. The departed Bill Brooks led the Bills in receiving—and he ranked just 25th in the AFC. Andre Reed, the club's all-time leader in receptions, re-signed in May. The top draft choice was spent on Mississippi State's Eric Moulds. Buffalo could use more help in this department, although Tasker dramatically filled the third-receiver role down the stretch. The coaches feel comfortable with young Lonnie Johnson at tight end after his 49-catch season.

No Doubting Thomas

Thurman Thomas may be past his peak as a runner, but he still finished sixth in the AFC in rushing, with 1,005 yards, most of it in crunch time, then performed nobly in the playoffs. He also averaged 8.5 yards on his 26 receptions. Darick Holmes rushed for 698 yards as Thomas's relief man.

Sack Time

The Bills doubled their sack total and became the most effective pass-rush team in the game. The key is Paup, who recorded a league-leading 17 1/2 sacks and became the NFL Defensive Player of the Year. With Paup on one side and end Bruce Smith (10 1/2 sacks) on the other, opponents can't overload their blocking schemes. End Phil Hansen also emerged with 10 sacks.

Almost as important as Paup was Washington, the huge nose tackle who tied up traffic in the middle. Paup and Spielman will be joined by inside linebacker Mark Maddox, another knee victim, with Bennett's old spot. A fight among Sam Rogers, Marlo Perry, and David White. The draft brings pass rushers Gabe Northern from Louisiana State and Sean Moran from Colorado State.

Safety First

The absence of Smith wasn't the only handicap in the playoffs. Injuries erased two regulars in the emerging secondary: strong safety Henry Jones and cornerback Jeff Burris. Kurt Schulz had six interceptions in his first year at free safety. Marlon Kerner was a surprise rookie contributor when he teamed with Thomas Smith on the corners after Burris's knee injury. The Bills also took a stab in the draft, selecting Appalachian State's Matt Stevens despite his reconstructed knee.

Getting Their Kicks

Levy hopes Moulds will put some fizz in the kickoff-return game. If Burris can't handle the punt-return duties, Tasker can. Place-kicker Steve Christie converted 31 of 40 field goals after a midseason slump and finished with 126 points, fifth-best in the NFL. Punter Chris Mohr (40.4-yard average) handles the Rich Stadium winds.

Indianapolis Colts

How much does the success of an NFL team, not endowed with enormous individual talent, depend on the chemistry between players and coach?

The Indianapolis Colts, who came within one controversial call by an official—plus a near-miss Hal Mary pass—of the Super Bowl, are about to find out.

Back in the Saddle

Ted Marchibroda was still receiving congratulations for his handling of the Colts, who lived on a fragile edge and not only survived but flourished in the playoffs, when he was notified by the club that his services would no longer be needed.

RICK STEWART / ALLSPORT USA

The Colts are likely to travel only as far as quarterback Jim Harbaugh, who had a wonder season in 1995, takes them.

Bill Tobin, the Colts' director of football, seemed to violate the age-old admonition against messing with a good thing when he separated Marchibroda from the team he worked a minor miracle on. Ironically, the man Tobin was expected to elevate to the head job, his brother Vince, the Colts' defensive coordinator, a ready hand had taken the Cardinals' head job when Marchibroda was jettisoned. So Lindy Infante is now the Colts' new coach. He enjoys a strong reputation as an offensive coordinator, but he flunked his previous trial as an NFL head coach in Green Bay.

Coming of Age

Infante and the Colts are likely to travel only as far as Jim Harbaugh, who had a wonder season at quarterback in 1995, takes them. For eight seasons Harbaugh was seen as a journeyman quarterback. When last season began, he had lost his starting job to Craig Erickson. A month later, he was the toast of the NFL. "I'm an ugly player," said Harbaugh, "but at least now I know who I am."

Harbaugh led the AFC in passing, threw for 17 touchdowns, and suffered a mere five interceptions. But he can't be measured by statistics alone. In 1995, he became an updated version of Hal of Famer Fran Tarkenton. He ran for 235 yards and a 4.5-yard average, and his poise was an inspiration to his teammates. In the AFC championship game he suffered a dislocated middle finger on his passing hand in the closing minutes but still directed his team 55 yards on the final drive, which ended with the nearly complete Hail Mary heave. In the playoff upset over Kansas City, he led another spectacular late rally against the league's top defense to tie the game.

Back in Business

The amazing part of the drive into the playoffs was that the Colts did it without Marshal Faulk. He is back healthy and ready to improve upon his 1,087 yards, even though the offensive line is altered. Ex-Bear Jay Leeuwenburg is the new center, with ex-Lion Doug Widell and another ex-Bear, Troy Auzanne, at the tackles. The only linemen who don't need to introduce themselves to the rest of the team are Eric Mahlum and Jason Mathews, the guards.

The Colts' Stable

The Colts have built a stable of role players. One is running back Zack Crockett who had just one carry in his rookie season, then exploded for a 147-yard day in the 35-20 playoff victory over San Diego after Faulk was injured. Another is wide receiver Floyd Turner, who caught the big touchdown pass against Kansas City and the one which put Indy ahead, 16-13, late in the AFC championship game.

Playing for Keeps

Infante's offense is a cautious one. His teams don't give away the ball. The Colts suffered just 11 interceptions and 11 lost fumbles in their 11-victory year. All but three of those victories were by four points or less. Since Faulk led the team with 56 receptions, the ingredients for a control game are there. Iowa tight end Scott Sutzker, mainly a receiver, was drafted to pair with last year's rookie star tight end, Ken Diger, who caught 42 passes.

The drafting of speedy wide receiver Marvin Harrison and the eventual return of Flipper Anderson from knee surgery should give Infante the capacity to open up, since he already has Sean Dawkins. Harrison played with three different starting quarterbacks in his last three years at Syracuse, but he still managed to catch 20 touchdown passes. One of the fastest rookies coming into the NFL, he returned two punts for touchdowns as a senior and was named the Big East's Special-Teams Player of the Year. He's tough, too. In Syracuse's blowout of Clemson in the Gator Bowl, he caught a touchdown in the first half, broke his thumb, and had another TD in the second half.

Two Tough Tonys

Jim Johnson, who succeeds Vince Tobin, inherits a strong run defense, which allowed just 91.1 yards per game. Only Kansas City and Pittsburgh were stronger in the AFC. What has to be improved is the pass rush, which produced only 29 sacks. The draft brings Steve Martin from Missouri.

The heart of the anti-run defense are the two tough Tonys, 315-pound Tony Siragusa and Tony McCoy, and the linebacker who plays behind them, Jeff Herrod, usually the Colts' leading tackler. The principal pass rusher is right end Tony Bennett, who had 10 1/2 sacks and returned a fumble for a touchdown last season. Johnson needs to get more out of second-year lineman Ellis Johnson and especially from Trev Alberts, who plays the "joker," position, sort of a wild-card linebacker. The Colts spent a fortune to match the offer sheet to which Jacksonville signed Quentin Coryatt, who was a standout in the playoffs. Stephen Grant is the other linebacker.

Meeting the Challenge

Eugene Daniel is 35 now, but a generation of challengers failed to unseat him from his cornerback position. The last, Ashley Ambrose, signed with Cincinnati as a free agent. Daniel still tied with Ambrose for most interceptions on the team, returning one 97 yards for a touchdown. The newest challenger may be Dedric Mathis, a draft sleeper whom the Colts picked in the second round. Jason Belser remains at free safety and David Tate at strong safety.

Nothing Special

Other than Aaron Bailey's 95-yard kickoff return for a touchdown, there wasn't much special about Indy's special teams. Newcomer Chris Gardocki did provide solid kickoffs and competent punting. Cary Blanchard was successful on 19 of 24 field goals and all 25 extra points.

MICHELL B. REBEL

Miami Dolphins

When Jimmy Johnson was behind the microphone of the Fox network's pregame show, no one was more outspoken, especially about the Miami Dolphins.

Early in the season, he said he saw no reason why they shouldn't make it to the Super Bowl. A month later, he was picking them to win the Super Bowl.

Changing of the Guard

Don Shula, the most successful coach in NFL history, could barely keep his nose above the rising expectations Johnson's pronouncements had created. By late January, after the Dolphins finished tied for second in the AFC East and Buffalo had eliminated them from the playoffs, the expectations were over Shula's gray head.

Now that Johnson has succeeded Shula in Miami, he sings different tunes at different times. At the NFL owners' meetings last March, J.J. was his old brash self, proclaiming, "We're the team to beat in the AFC!" At other, quieter times, he suggests that it might take three years for him to put together the sort of Dolphins he wants.

The Dolphins plan major changes on defense. New coach Jimmy Johnson may use waves of linemen, as he did in Dallas.

Missing Elements

For those who would compare Johnson's coming to Miami with his coming to Dallas, remember there are two elements missing this time.

1. Mike Lynn is no longer in the NFL. It was the Vikings' former general manager who gave Johnson a fortune in draft choices in exchange for Herschel Walker in one of the most one-sided trades ever in pro football. The Cowboys misfired on almost half the draft picks and still had enough left to create the foundation of a three-time Super Bowl champion.

2. The luck of the draw has not deposited a Troy Aikman on the roster. The year before Johnson arrived in Dallas, the Cowboys shocked their fans with the worst record in the NFL, but it turned out to be superb timing. It was the year that UCLA's super quarterback became draft eligible, and J.J. inherited the future Hall of Famer.

On the Run

It isn't just the absence of a great young quarterback that blurs the comparison with the Dallas teams Johnson doesn't have anything resembling his superb offensive trioka with the Cowboys—Ermitt Smith, Michael Irvin, and Aikman. In fact, the Dolphins haven't had a reliable running game in some time, and strong running games are a major part of Jimmy Johnson football. Bernie Parmalee was the Dolphins' leading rusher, with 878 yards, a total topped by 19 runners in the league a year ago. Terry Kirby collected 414 yards. The Dolphins averaged 3.6 yards per rush, almost half a yard below the conference norm. Their longest run of the year was 40 yards.

Dan Marino

Miami still has Dan Marino, but he's 35, which means Johnson's Super Bowl clock is ticking. Part of the Dolphins' flabby running game has been Marino's tendency to abandon the run too often and attempt to win the game with his great arm alone. That strategy works quite often, but not often enough. Miami was No. 1 in the AFC in passing offense, as Marino completed over 64 percent of his passes for 3,668 yards and 24 touchdowns, overtaking Fran Tarkenton for the top spot in the league record book.

The Dolphins' top free agent is wide receiver Fred Barnett. The erstwhile Eagle is especially dangerous around the goal line. Tight end Eric Green is another challenge for the new coach's motivating. He missed 39 practices last year and Johnson says, "No practice, no play." O.J. McDuffie caught 62 passes in '95 and could become more important to Marino. Kirby is best when allowed to function as the pass-catching back. He led the team with 66 receptions. Free agent Charles Jordan brings speed.

Upon Johnson's hiring, Marino vowed to stick with whatever works, including more patience with the running game. But he has said that before. It will be one of the more interesting aspects of the Marino-Johnson relationship to watch.

Free Agency

Johnson didn't have to deal with the ravages of free agency nearly as much in Dallas as he will in Miami. He hadn't been on his new job a month when four starters had defected, including three on defense. One defection solved a problem for the coach. How to deal with Bryan Cox, the undisciplined linebacker. Cox jumped to the Bears. He was followed by the signing of pass rusher Marco Coleman by San Diego and of cornerback Troy Vincent and wide receiver Irving Fryar by Philadelphia. Only the departure of Vincent, considered by Shula as his best defensive player, was mourned by Johnson.

The Draft

Johnson's opening draft was a challenge to his motivational abilities. The week before he picked, he identified Bayor's big defensive lineman, Daryl Gardener as "an underachiever who has great potential—but potential can get you fired." On draft day, Johnson couldn't resist the potential. His second pick, Kansas cornerback Dorian Brew, was a so-so inconsistent talent in college. The best candidate for immediate production is UCLA running back Karim Abdul-Jabbar, who doesn't have special speed but offers unquestioned effort. Another rookie, Stanley Pritchett, could be the blocking fullback Miami is looking for.

Main Line

The line is somewhat shaky with left guard Keith Sims recovering from a foot injury and battered right tackle Ron Heller near retirement. Center Tim Ruddy had a rough introduction in his first season as a starter. Left tackle Richmond Webb is still the main lineman. Johnson needs production from youngsters Billy Milner, Andrew Greene, and huge James Brown acquired in a trade with Philadelphia.

Defensive Changes

On defense there will be major changes. Ends Danie Stubbs and Aaron Jones were signed as free agents. Johnson thinks Jones, a flop so far, could be rejuvenated playing in a 4-3 defense. Gardener will be positioned next to another huge tackle, Tim Bowens, with heavyweights Norman Hand and rookie Shane Burton behind them. Steve Emtman is now an end, where he competes against Jeff Cross and Trace Armstrong. Johnson may use waves of defensive linemen, as he did in Dallas.

Whoever among the linebackers has speed should survive. Aubrey Beavers may answer the description, but a couple of draftees from the Southwest Conference, LaCurtis Jones of Baylor and Zach Thomas of Texas Tech, may have as much chance as anyone. J.B. Brown and Terrell Buckley are the experienced corners, with Gene Atkins, Michael Stewart, and Louie Oliver back at safety.

Solid State

McDuffie had a disappointing year returning punts (6.8-yard average), but averaged 24.5 yards per kickoff return. Place-kicker Pete Stoyanovich (118 points), who had less success on field goals inside the 29-yard line (8-11) than he did on those between 30 and 49 yards (17-18), and punter John Kidd (42.7) provide a solid kicking game.

New England Patriots

A funny thing happened to the Patriots on their crusade to the Super Bowl. They became Bledsoe-poor. They are paying so much money to wonder quarterback Drew Bledsoe that they can't stay competitive in the free-agent market any longer.

Free-Agent Bargains

The Pats signed six bargain free agents during the off-season, but consider their backgrounds.

- Wide receiver Shawn Jefferson of San Diego has great speed, but he drops the ball too often, otherwise he would still be a Charger.
- Safety Willie Clay of Detroit makes the plays (8 interceptions for the Lions last year), but he doesn't have the speed to play much more than zone coverages.
- Defensive tackle Mark Wheeler of Tampa Bay is a solid journeyman, but the

KEVIN REEDE

Dave Meggett piled up almost 2,000 combined yards in rushing, receiving, and kick returns for the Patriots.

Pats need a pass-rush push up the middle. Wheeler has 11 sacks in four pro seasons.

• Defensive tackle Pro Sagapolutee of Cleveland. When he plays, he's tough, but he's injured a lot and has just two sacks in five seasons.

• Inside linebacker Monte Brown of Buffalo is a tough hitter against the run when he isn't hurt, which is fairly often. Brown would have been fortunate to make the Bills' roster this season.

• Punter Tom Tupa of Cleveland. The one signing which gives the Pats clear improvement.

Heimle

There are all manner of things going on in New England, none of them designed to make Bill Parcells's coaching stay a long one. Ostensibly, the most positive thing that happened in the off-season was that Bill Belichick rejoined Parcells, his old boss on the Giants, after he was dismissed as head coach by the Baltimore Ravens. Yet even that had a bizarre quality to it. Belichick has the title of assistant head coach/secondary, but because he has a reputation for impatience with players, especially young ones, he'll design a game plan which will then be put into practice by Al Groh, the defensive coordinator.

With Belichick on board, the Patriots wanted to change to a 4-3 defense. But they don't have the personnel to do it since only Troy Barnett is a natural defensive end and Wheeler is the only quality tackle.

Draft Daze

In the draft, Parcells wanted to trade down and take a big defensive lineman, but he doesn't have full control any longer, so the pick was a wide receiver, Terry Glenn of Ohio State. The owner, Bob Kraft, said he made that decision. In the fifth round, one monster defensive tackle remained, Nebraska's Christian Peter. Peter has a criminal rap sheet that was well-documented in the national media. The Pats selected him anyway.

Four days later, the Patriots dropped Peter, claiming they didn't know about the rap sheet. Maybe they cancelled their subscription to Sports Illustrated and don't watch "48 Hours." Kraft stepped forward again and said he made the decision to draft Peter. Which brings up a question: How is all of this playing with Parcells?

Offensive Assets

There are reasons the Patriots still can be taken seriously, most of them on offense. They still have Bledsoe passing the ball and Ben Coates, the best tight end in the AFC, catching it. Their offensive line is a strong one, and in second-year pro Curtis Martin they have one of the bright young runners in the game.

Drew Bledsoe

Bledsoe was not worth his big money in 1995. He threw more interceptions (16) than touchdown passes (13), which isn't unusual for him. But in 1994 the tradeoff was more digestible: 27 interceptions to 25 TD passes. His passing yardage was down more than 1,000 yards from the previous year and his passer rating (63.7) was 28th in the NFL.

Maybe an asterisk is in order. In an early season game against San Francisco, Bledsoe suffered a left shoulder separation, but Parcells kept him in the game. The young quarterback threw 51 passes, despite being in severe pain. He missed one game, then went all the way in a 37-3 blowout loss to Denver in which he passed 56 times. It was not one of the wisest coaching decisions in Parcells's career.

Hidden Gems

Martin appears to be one of the all-time draft bargains. The Pats got him in the third round in 1995. It wasn't just his 1,487 yards and 14 rushing touchdowns it was the way he finished against hot, playoff-bound teams: 142 yards against Miami, 148 against Buffalo, 120 against Pittsburgh, and, in the finale, 103 against Indianapolis.

There was no give-up in Coates, either. He caught three touchdown passes in a victory over Buffalo, a game the Bills needed desperately, then caught 11 passes against the Steelers. His 84 catches were the most, by far, of any NFL tight end. The line features Pro Bowler Bruce Armstrong at left tackle. Dave Wohlabaugh won the center job four games into his rookie season and has the look of a long-time fixture. Ex-Giants Bob Kratch and William Roberts are the guards and Max Lane the right tackle.

Vincent Brisby was the only reliable wideout. He caught 66 passes, but only three for scores. Glenn needs to be a major contributor as a rookie, along with Jefferson, and it would help if speedy Kevin Lee stayed injury free. Versatile Dave Meggett, reunited with Parcells, piled up 1,931 all-purpose yards.

Defensive Needs

The Patriots needed a couple of legitimate stoppers in the line, a monster inside linebacker to replace Vincent Brown, and a couple of new safeties in order to move up from 28th place in the NFL defensive rankings. Neither free agency nor the draft brought the line studs and the other reinforcements are in an uncertain state.

There is an overload of rush linemen. Willie McGinest had 11 sacks, including eight in the last seven games. His opposite number is Chris Slade, who plays the same style but has to improve on his four sacks. They are joined by Tedy Bruschi, a great college end at Arizona who is being converted to linebacker, not an easy switch.

In a mystery move tied to the salary cap, Vincent Brown, the defensive captain, was released. His questionable knees were cited as the cause, but he ended the season with an 10-tackle performance against the Colts and finished with 100 tackles for the fifth consecutive year. The relatively inexperienced Monte Brown and Ted Johnson must replace him. Wheeler and Sagapolutele are the main suspects in the interior line. Journeyman Larry Tharpe also was signed. The top draftee was fourth-rounder Chris Sullivan, who plays the run well.

Cornerstones

Ty Law, last season's No. 1 draftee, won the job at right cornerback late in the season and had interceptions in his first three starts. Ricky Reynolds brings experience to the other side. That's important since Belichick and Groh use the corners to play man-to-man coverages while the safeties play a two-deep zone. Clay will be the free safety. Rookie Lawyer Milloy, who has a strong reputation as a run supporter but is iffy on coverage, should be the strong safety.

Room for Improvement

Place-kicker Matt Bahr had the lowest field goal percentage in the AFC (.697 on 23 of 33). Tupa brings a 43.6-yard punting average. Meggett was among the league leaders in kickoff returns (25.4) but suffered a drop-off in punt returns.

New York Jets

Remember last season's AFC championship game between Indianapolis and Pittsburgh, when the camera twice caught Steelers quarterback Neil O'Donnell blowing

™ kisses to someone up in the luxury boxes? There was a mystery then as to the identity of the target. Seven weeks later, the evidence pointed to Leon Hess, the octogenarian owner of the Jets, who agreed to pay O'Donnell $25 million over the next seven years to quarterback his franchise

Some see it as one of the great free-agency hijackings of all time. Others say the Jets did the right thing, even though they overpaid to do it. Where else was the worst team in the NFL going to find a quarterback? Not in the draft, where most talent appraisers weren't sure any of this year's crop of college quarterbacks was worth even a second-round draft choice. Other than O'Donnell, the 1996 free agent market was so devoid of quality that the Arizona Cardinals signed Boomer Esiason, whom the Jets and most other teams deemed over the hill.

O'Donnell, who completed 59 percent of his throws for 2,970 yards and 17 touchdowns with just seven interceptions, may not rank among the top echelon of NFL quarterbacks, but he should give the Jets better production than they have had in a long time. They were dead last in total offense and had just two rushing touchdowns last season. Coach Rich Kotite could end up valuing O'Donnell for what he is unlikely to do, throw interceptions, despite O'Donnell's pair of damaging interceptions in Pittsburgh's Super Bowl loss to Dallas. Veteran Frank Reich was signed as the backup.

Air Strikes

New York hasn't spared anything in support for its new quarterback. Keyshawn

Johnson, the best receiver in the draft, was the Jets' No. 1 pick. He immediately becomes O'Donnell's go-to guy. Johnson is at his best in the big games. He caught a total of 20 passes and scored four touchdowns in the 1994 Cotton Bowl and 1995 Rose Bowl. He gives the Jets a big lift and already seems comfortable in the media's bright lights. In the second round the Jets drafted the prolific Alex Van Dyke, who caught 227 passes, including 26 for touchdowns in his last two seasons at Nevada.

The Jets also went into the market to sign one of the most desirable wide receivers, Jeff Graham, who caught 150 balls for more than 2,200 yards in his two seasons with the Chicago Bears. The bonus for New York is that Graham spent his formative seasons as a Steeler, meaning O'Donnell is accustomed to him.

With former No. 1 pick Johnny Mitchell jettisoned, Kyle Brady has tight end to himself. Last year's top draftee, Brady was reduced to making 911 calls to his college coach at Penn State since he wasn't learning much from the Jets staff. New offensive coordinator Ron Erhardt, fresh from the Steelers, should fix that. Even with all the new receivers on hand, work should be found for Wayne Chrebet, the surprising free agent who led the team with 66 catches in his rookie year.

With 10 sacks, defensive Rookie of the Year Hugh Douglas had an immediate impact on the Jets.

MIKE ALLEN

Protecting the Passer

To protect the new quarterback, the Jets signed two new tackles Jumbo Elliott of the Giants and David Williams, the latter most famous for taking an unofficial paternity leave when he played for Houston. Both are risky investments, Jumbo because he has a bad back and Williams because he's never performed particularly well. Yet Kotite denuded his offensive line so recklessly last year that something had to be done.

Center Dave Alexander and tackle Siappel Maamala come off the injury list, which should help. The biggest help would come from the development of guard Matt O'Dwyer. He didn't play much as a rookie, but his skill and nasty outlook are needed now.

Grounded

The Jets took some heat when they passed up Texas A&M speed back Lee-lard McElroy for Van Dyke in the draft's second round at the same hour they were re-signing running back Adrian Murrell to a rich contract. The Jets had the league's worst rushing attack—a mere 1,279 team yards. Five NFL players, including AFC East rival Curtis Martin (1,487) of New England, topped that mark. In comparison, Murrell's team-leading 795 yards ranked 22nd in the league.

"The Jets didn't make a mistake," says John Butler, a strong admirer of McElroy. "We think Murrell is one of the most underrated running backs in the NFL." The reshaped offensive line should help him. Fullback Brad Baxter, who ran for 296 yards, will do the blocking. Ronald Moore, whom the Jets obtained from Arizona for receiver Rob Moore prior to the start of last season, had just 121 yards.

On the Bright Side

The bright side is on defense. The Jets finished first in the NFL in pass defense, which is a slightly skewed statistic since they were 25th against the run. Nevertheless, they recorded an impressive 43 sacks and intercepted 17 passes. Better yet, it is a young defense loaded with premium talent.

Last year's defensive Rookie of the Year, right end Hugh Douglas, made an immediate impact with 10 sacks. The front office re-signed Marvin Washington, who had six sacks in his best pro season. There is no huge interior lineman to tie up traffic, but Matt Brock contributed five sacks and Erik Howard, another journeyman, offers experience.

Backing the Line

Middle linebacker Marvin Jones finally stayed healthy and had a strong year. With Jones and the underrated Mo Lewis and Bobby Houston on the outside, the Jets' linebacking ranks with the best. Left corner Aaron Glenn, the club's top pick two years back, needed a partner on the right side, so his old Texas A&M teammate, Ray Mickens, was drafted and may start. Both are small, but Mickens has a lot of Glenn's qualities, too. Victor Green remains at one safety; another rookie, Marcus Coleman of Texas Tech, could push for work alongside him.

Oldie but Goodie

At 40, all-time kicker Nick Lowery is cranky but effective. He was successful on 17 of 21 field goals. Brian Hansen led the NFL in a stat no team is proud to claim: most punts (100). A lighter workload could make him more effective. Ron Carpenter returned just 20 kickoffs, but his 27.7-yard average was the best in the league. Rookie Chad Cascadden was a coverage demon.

Willie Williams stepped into the Steelers' depleted secondary and led the AFC with seven interceptions.

ping numbers, but he was the right guy for the Steelers. The Super Bowl notwithstanding, he had one of the four lowest interception percentages in the NFL, 1.7.

Miller, who impressed the brass during the preseason in 1995, seems the safer choice. His style in the pocket is more similar to O'Donnell's. Miller threw 56 passes, mostly in mop-up situations, after a brief prepping in the World League of American Football. His touchdown-to-interception ratio was 2 to 5.

Stewart launched seven passes, some when he was lined up at positions other than quarterback. His indoctrination into a utility role took too much time away from his quarterback tutorial. Stewart's freewheeling style may be too much for the Steelers' offensive line, with two position changes of its own, to digest in one season.

If Cowher wants experience, there's always Mike Tomczak, who had a TD-to-interception ratio of 1 to 9. None of the solutions screams "Repeat!" Plan B, in the wake of O'Donnell's departure, might have been controlling the ball with the run and playing defense. But that was before Searcy jumped to the Jaguars and Morris got arrested.

Starting Over

The Steelers put a potent smiley face on the off-season by dealing for Bettis, who won the NFC's Rookie of the Year award in 1993 and had two consecutive 1,000-yard seasons. Bettis alienated the fans in St. Louis and the Rams' coaching staff by first holding out, then putting them in cruise control once he did report.

Bettis has the sort of power and speed to hurt tacklers who get in his way. In his first two and a half seasons, he recorded 10 100-yard games and a 220-yarder. The more worrisome red light goes on when his last eight games of 1994 are examined. Not only were there no 100-yard games, but there were six games when he gained less than 50 yards. If Cowher can restimulate Bettis's

Before they were measured for their championship rings, the Steelers' AFC title was in an advanced state of decay. A great deal happened to this team since the day it battled Dallas almost to the wire in Super Bowl XXX, little of it good.

Personnel Losses

The starting quarterback, Neil O'Donnell, defected to the New York Jets via free agency and left almost no usable experience in his wake. Leon Searcy, arguably the best right tackle in the NFL, signed with Jacksonville as a free agent. Pass-rushing linebacker Kevin Greene signed with Carolina as a free agent. The team's leading ground gainer in the Super Bowl, Bam Morris, was arrested on a felony drug case in Texas. Days after the Super Bowl, offensive coordinator Ron Erhardt was fired. And the highly regarded special teams coach Bobby April, quit without another job in hand. The word "dynasty" is not banded about much after such developments.

Will Bill Cowher, the coach, be able to handle all these setbacks? There were some antidotes, mainly the signing of free agent lineman Will Wolford from Indianapolis and the trade which brought running back Jerome Bettis from St. Louis. Preliminary plans are not to use Wolford in Searcy's old spot, but to station him at left guard. The most nagging personnel problem is quarterback. Cowher's choices between the inexperienced Jim Miller or the even less experienced Kordell Stewart, who spent his rookie year as "slash," the jack of all positions, functioning as a receiver and runner as much as he did as quarterback.

A Call to Arms

Fan sentiment in Pittsburgh after the Super Bowl, in which O'Donnell gift-wrapped two damn good interceptions by Dallas's Larry Brown, was "good riddance" when O'Donnell signed with the Jets. "We lost a bunch of players to free agency last year but we adjusted," argued Cowher. "We lost Rod Woodson in the first quarter of the opening game and adjusted. We'll work it out."

Still, Pittsburgh couldn't afford to lose O'Donnell, even though New York overpaid to get him. He threw for just under 3,000 yards and 17 touchdowns, not eye-pop-zeal, the Steelers could be better off than they were with either Morris or even Barry Foster when he was in the mood to play. Veteran Eric Pegrum was the club's leading rusher a year ago, with 813 yards and five touchdowns.

On the Plus Side

To replace Searcy at right tackle, Cowher will plug in Justin Strzelczyk, a utility man with six years of experience. Strzelczyk played guard mostly, but he had four starts in place of John Jackson at left tackle last season. Jackson underwent midseason knee surgery yet ended up a Pro Bowl alternate. Dermonti Dawson is the best center in the AFC. Brendan Stai, one of the studs from Nebraska's 1994 national championship line, won the job at right guard late in the season.

Catching On

Yancey Thigpen, starting at ground zero in 1992, worked his way up to a Pro Bowl berth last season. He had 85 catches and four 100-yard games, becoming the Steelers' first 1,000-yard receiver in a decade. His spectacular leaping catch against Buffalo in the playoffs may have saved the game. Andre Hastings caught 48 passes and Ernie Mills had eight touchdowns among his 39 catches but tore up a knee in the Super Bowl. Charlie Johnson, coming back from his own knee injury after starting 10 games, could push everyone.

There was a happy ending after Eric Green signed with the Miami Dolphins a year ago. Mark Bruener was drafted and by October was the starting tight end. He's a work in progress but Cowher is comfortable with him. Hastings and Mills are the return specialists. Hastings returned a punt 72 yards for a touchdown and Mills averaged 24.2 yards on 54 kickoffs.

Steel Tough

The Steelers will at least be a contender, even with the shaky situations at quarterback and running back, if only because they are so strong defensively. They were second in the NFL against the run, sixth against the pass, and third overall. They allowed just 943 plays, lowest in the league, surrendered 285.1 yards per game, less than a yard per game less than the league-leading Kansas City Chiefs, and led the AFC with 22 interceptions.

Woodson, the best defender, made an amazing comeback from knee surgery to play a specialty role in the Super Bowl. The NFL searched its archives and could not find any evidence of any player returning from reconstructive knee surgery to play later in the season in which he was injured. The Steelers need Woodson all the way back in '96.

Inside linebacker Levon Kirkland, overshadowed by many of his teammates should have been voted the Most Valuable Player in the Super Bowl even though he was on the losing side. Not only is Kirkland a 100-tackle man, he's now making the big plays. His inside partner, Chad Brown, was hindered by ankle injuries but has risen to first-rank status.

The pass rush revolved around linebackers Greg Lloyd and Greene. "Avoid Lloyd" warn the banners that hang in Three Rivers Stadium, and opposing offenses try to stay away from the Steelers' big hitter. Jason Gildon is Greene's heir-apparent, and the draft brings pass rusher Steve Conley. Ray Seals made a big contribution at right end with 8 1/2 sacks. Left end Brenton Buckner started to be a force in his second season and nose tackle Joel Steed protects the inside linebackers and provides inside push for the pass rush. The big front usually wears on an offensive line.

Cornerstones

It's hard to believe the Steelers lost both corners, Woodson and Deion Figures, and still went to the Super Bowl. Pittsburgh gives thanks to the versatile Camell Lake. A linebacker at UCLA, Lake became one of the best strong safeties in the NFL, then switched to right corner at midseason and went to the Pro Bowl. Willie Williams replaced Figures and led the AFC with seven interceptions.

Free safety Darren Perry has started every game since joining the Steelers in 1992.

Kicking Game

Place-kicker Norm Johnson (34 of 41 field goals) will be leaned upon again. A better punter than Rohn Stark (40.1-yard average) is needed, though. The ex-Colt wilted when he came outdoors. Since both Woodson and Mills will be treated tenderly because of their knee injuries, there will be a search for a new kick-returner. Hastings is likely to return punts.

With three top offensive linemen, the Jaguars and quarterback Mark Brunell plan to succeed by controlling the ball.

four-victory record of the r pioneer season by controlling the football

"Size matters," said Coughlin, "but what matters more is production. Size is an advantage in certain situations, and you'd like it to be a major plus."

Power Backs

The Jaguars finished in the middle of the NFL pack running the ball. They already have a promising power back in James Stewart, who led the team in rushing with 525 yards (3.8-yard average). Brunell was the No. 2 rusher (480 yards), followed by Vaughn Dunbar (361). During the winter Jacksonville claimed Natrone Means from the Chargers, where he had grown rich and hard to handle off the field. Coughlin is nothing if not a disciplinarian. Means,

Jacksonville Jaguars

Head coach Tom Coughlin's Mickey Mouse rules are now legend in the NFL. Wear helmets at all times in practice, sit up straight in the meetings, no wearing sunglasses on the field for the coaches, etc. The word was that all that high school stuff would drive off the good free agents. Not

In the Line of Duty

The Jacksonville offense featured 16 different starting lineups, one for each game

The Jaguars made a move for more stability with one of the most important free-agent signings early. They corralled the Pittsburgh Steelers' Leon Searcy, arguably the best right tackle in the league. He was interested in money, not rules. The Jaguars already had the NFL's biggest offensive line, but the Searcy signing made good sense for three reasons.

1. The Jaguars now have three topnotch offensive linemen who should be their foundation for the next decade. They had Tony Boselli at left tackle and Brian DeMarco, who now moves from right tackle to guard.

2. Coughlin settled on Mark Brunell, a left-hander, as his starting quarterback. Southpaws, you see, need competent right tackles to protect their blind spot.

3. The Jags plan to increase the modest who didn't grumble about rules when he got to Jacksonville, is just 26 and, at the top of his game, is as tough to bring down as any power back in the NFL. He ran for 730 yards on 186 carries in an injury-plagued year, but in 1994 he finished second in the AFC, with 1,350 yards in 343 rushing attempts.

RIC FOGEL/SPORT ILLU

A Young Steve Young?

Can you blame Jax supporters if they peer at Brunell and think they see a young Steve Young? Brunell got lost in the shuffle at Green Bay behind Brett Favre and Ty Detmer, and before that shared the quarterback job at the University of Washington with the flamboyant Billy Joe Hobert, now an Oakland Raider. But the lefty was always an intriguing talent who needed more playing time.

Last year he got it. He completed over 58 percent of his passes and threw for more touchdowns (15) than either Drew Bledsoe of New England or Rick Mirer of Seattle, the two AFC prodigies. He had a higher quarterback efficiency rating (82.6) than Jeff Blake (82.1) of Cincinnati, Jim Kelly (81.1) of Buffalo, Steve Bono (79.5) of Kansas City, and Stan Humphries (80.4) of San Diego. He also had the fourth-lowest interception rating (2.0) in the AFC. As for the Young comparison, Brunell's 480 yards rushing were almost twice as many as the 49er star, his 7.2 yard average more than two yards higher, and his four rushing touchdowns one more than Young had.

Soar Spots

With Means paired with Stewart, the running should soar. In fact, the Jags' running game needs to soar, since the team finished 28th in the NFL in offense in its first year. Only the two New York teams finished lower and, like the Jets and Giants, the Jaguars' most woeful offensive deficiency was passing.

Brunell isn't overloaded with pass-catching collaborators. Keenan McCardell who caught 56 passes as a Brown last year, got a four-year $5.8 million deal and Coughlin says "he's emerged." Willie Jackson, who led the team with 53 receptions, and Desmond Howard, who had 26 and just one touchdown, have not emerged.

Reggie Barlow of Alabama State and Florida's overachieving Chris Doering arrive via the draft. Tight end is a hybrid, Pete Mitchell catching 41 passes (12.9-yard average) and Derek Brown blocking, when the latter wasn't injured, that is.

Drafting for Defense

The draft was used for to bolster the NFL's No. 21 defense. The Jaguars allowed 404 points and 46 touchdowns, AFC highs. Linebacker Kevin Hardy, the first-round pick, is the whole package. The Big Ten Defensive Player of the Year and the Butkus Award winner, he won't come off the field on third down. And if Coughlin wants to use him on the pass rush, Hardy could do that, too, even though his high-profile college teammate, Simeon Rice, performed that specialty when they played together at Illinois. The Jaguars' No. 2 pick, defensive end Tony Brackens, left Texas a year early. With some polishing he could develop into a good pass rusher.

Brackens will spend the first portion of the season learning behind Joel Smeenge at left end. Smeenge can also play outside linebacker, so when Brackens is ready, the veteran's versatility will remain useful. Jacksonville had the weakest pass rush in the NFL, with just 17 sacks. Smeenge, with four, was the team leader. The Jaguars have to get more out of right end Jeff Lageman, who is capable of more than the three sacks he had last season. It will help as well to have former Green Bay strongman John Jurkovic, who was a force in the NFC championship game against Dallas until he suffered a knee injury, at tackle alongside Kevin Pritchett.

Backing the Line

With a little experience, the linebacking corps could be special. Hardy will line up on the strong side opposite Eddie Robinson, a prize free agent signed from Houston who had 3 1/2 sacks and an interception return for a touchdown last year. The middle linebacker is Bryan Schwartz, who went straight from the campus of little Augustana College and into the Jaguars' starting lineup. He led the team in tackles as a rookie.

Secondary Concerns

There is certain to be change in the defensive backfield, where Dana Hall was signed from the Indianapolis Colts and immediately installed as the free safety alongside strong safety Travis Davis. The coaches are also high on second-year man Chris Hudson. Mickey Washington and Vinnie Clark started all 16 games on the corners, but they may receive a challenge from the well-traveled Robert Massey and rookies Aaron Beasley of West Virginia (third round) and John Fischer of Missouri Western (sixth round).

Special Teams

Place-kicker Mike Hollis led the team in scoring (87 points). His 34-yard field goal on the last play defeated the Cleveland Browns, 24-21, in the final game of the season, and Bryan Barker had the highest net punting average in the league (38.6 yards). Howard averaged 10.3 yards per punt return, fifth-best in the AFC, and Jimmy Smith returned one kickoff 89 yards for a touchdown.

Cincinnati Bengals

Cincinnati coach David Shula's 1995 season could perhaps be summed up in two agonizing plays. Both came in a single series during the last game he would ever coach against his father, Don, in October.

On the first play, Cincinnati's pass rushers seemed to trap Miami's Dan Marino in the end zone for a safety. The referees ruled that Marino had released his pass on time. No safety. The second play was a third-down sideline pass. Marino threw the ball, the receiver caught it, but his foot came down clearly out of bounds—directly in front of David Shula. The zebras ruled the catch was made in bounds.

Miami continued on downfield to score and win by three points (one of five three-point losses by the Bengals in a 7-9 season). Now the Bengals' fortunes may be about to turn. Some of those three-point losses could turn into victories in 1996. This young Bengals' team is on the prowl and ready to make a move for the top of the AFC Central.

Breakout Year

"We have three players who could have breakout years," said Shula. "One is Dan Wilkinson at defensive end. The second is Darnay Scott at wide receiver." Then comes the punch line: "Ki-Jana Carter."

The expectation was that Cincinnati would be happy to have Carter ready for the 1997 opener after his serious knee injury in a preseason game last year. But his rehabilitation borders on the miraculous and now he is the key to the season. The Bengals averaged 89.9 yards per game rushing a year ago. Only the Jets were more futile in the AFC. A healthy Carter, the No. 1 pick in the '95 draft, would bump up that number considerably. Harold Green led the team with 661 yards (3.9 average), but that was 15th in the conference and he scored just two touchdowns. Eric Bieniemy ran for 381 yards (3.9) and three TDs.

Pass Rush

On the surface, Cincinnati's pass rush doesn't look deficient. The Bengals had 42 sacks, seven over the AFC average. Yet they gave up far more passing yards than any team in the conference and then lost their best defensive back, safety Darryl Williams, who was signed by Seattle as a free agent. The Bengals signed Bo Orlando, a San Diego safety, but he is no Williams. Wilkinson had eight sacks a year ago—one fewer than left end John Copeland, the Bengals' top draft choice in 1993—but much more is needed, especially consistency, from the 313-pound "Big Daddy" if the Bengals are to make a serious move on Pittsburgh.

Scott Free

Scott's emergence may be essential to the increasingly dangerous Cincinnati passing attack. If Carl Pickens is to be saluted with blanket, multiple coverages, the time for Scott to seize opportunities may be here. "He runs as fast when the football is in the air as any guy I've ever seen," said Shula. Scott caught 52 passes, but his per-catch average (15.8) was three yards higher than Pickens's.

Special Attention

Pickens deserves attention on the other side. In the last two seasons, he has caught 170 passes (99 a year ago), 28 for touchdowns, including 17 in '95. He caught a total of 16 passes for 237 yards and two touchdowns against Pittsburgh. He also played the final, meaningless game against Minnesota after he had suffered a sprained shoulder and a mild concussion against Cleveland the week before. He caught six passes for 73 yards and a TD on a day that completed his perfect work record, starting all 16 games for the first time in his career.

Tight end Tony McGee had his best season: 55 catches (137 yards). He will be joined by former Rutgers All-America Marco Battaglia, since the Bengals want to use more double tight-end sets.

Burning Bright

In Jeff Blake, Shula has the man who can get the ball to Pickens, Scott, or anyone else. Blake, in his first full season as the starter, threw more often (567 times) than any Bengal quarterback in history, passing for 3,822 yards and an AFC-high 28 touchdowns. His TD pass to interception ratio (28-17) was exceeded only by John Elway of Denver and Jim Harbaugh of Indianapolis. Blake set a team record by passing for touchdowns in his first 14 games. More significantly, he threw for six touchdowns and no interceptions against the Steelers.

Last season was Blake's first as a starter, however, and he lagged in the second half. Thirteen of his interceptions came in the final nine games, as did 17 of the 24 sacks. Another year of working with offensive coordinator Bruce Coslet and a '96 season with a viable running game should move Blake into the NFL's top echelon.

Pass Protection

Now the idea is to protect Blake. Last year's line set a club record allowing just 25 sacks. For the first time in 13 years, the Bengals used a first-round selection to draft an offensive lineman, tackle Willie Anderson of Auburn.

The Defense Rests

If it were a matter of offense only, the Bengals would challenge for the Central Division championship. The trouble is, the defense finished last in the NFL and is under a state of repair. The team's weaknesses were exposed last November in a game against Pittsburgh. Cincinnati had beaten the Steelers, 27-9, in October. In the rematch, Cincinnati, 31-13, in the third quarter before Pittsburgh scored 36 unanswered points.

Starting Over

There could be three new starters in the secondary alone. Cornerbacks Ashley Ambrose and Jimmy Spencer were signed from Indianapolis and New Orleans, respectively. Keep an eye on Colorado State's Greg Myers, who could be a fifth-round steal. Bracey Walker is the strong safety.

In the line, the left side of Willie Anderson and Cope and presents a formidable push. Buiky Keith Rucker at tackle and 49er castoff Artie Smith are on the right side.

Special Teams

The return game was less than scintillating, especially in punt returns, which averaged an NFL-low 4.9 yards. But Lee Johnson's 38.6-yard net average tied for best among NFL punters while kicker Doug Pellrey hit 29 of 36 field goals and broke the Bengals' scoring record with 121 points.

Passing Time

The Oilers are far removed from the run-and-shoot days when almost every play was a pass, there were no actual tight ends on the roster, and the running game was an afterthought. Now Fisher and the brass patiently await the development of Steve McNair, the brilliant young passer who was kept on the sidelines until late in the year lest he be traumatized before he was ready for NFL combat.

Houston Oilers

ed as a lame-duck team in 1995 and most Houstonians greeted their possible departure with a yawn, they are a team on the rise no matter where they are located.

Under Construction

The offense is in development but the defense is strong enough to allow them to win during the construction period. The 7-9 record was a surprise last year and the Oilers were competitive in every game except the two against Pittsburgh. In seven games the defense allowed 17 points or less.

Bud Adams, who has owned the franchise since it went into business, made some major mistakes through the years, but hiring and retaining Jeff Fisher as head coach was not one of them. Fisher superbly handled one of the NFL's most difficult transition jobs, and his steady hand is the biggest reason the Oilers didn't cave in as the Browns did in the turmoil over a probable franchise move.

Fisher is a Buddy Ryan disciple without the negatives and the "I-want-all-the-power" approach. Floyd Reese, who came up from

.FL's "slash" franchise from Houston/Nashville. "During the off-season we will they play?" as a question as frequently asked as "How will they play?" Considering the Oilers operate

Chris Chandler

Chris Chandler will be the quarterback until McNair is ready. "Chris knows his role," said Fisher. "He is the starter because he knows our offense and NFL defenses." Chandler had a respectable season with 17 touchdown passes, 2,460 yards, and a 63.2 completion percentage.

Ball Control

The Oilers added a key free agent in May when they signed veteran Ronnie Harmon of San Diego. The versatile Harmon became the fifth running back in NFL history with 500 receptions. He has 522 for his career, including 63 last year for a 10.7-yard average. He also ran for 187 yards.

With the drafting of Heisman Trophy winner Eddie George, the Oilers are likely to control the ball this year, attempt to keep the games close with their defense and create some breaks for themselves. George is the sort of pound-away ball carrier who can make it work behind Houston's line, which is particularly strong guard to guard. Center Mark Stepnoski and graybeard guard Bruce Matthews went to the Pro Bowl. Kevin Donnalley is the other guard. Brad Hopkins is sold at one tackle, but Irv Eatman may eventually give way to one of the rookies, Michigan's Jon Runyan (fourth round) or Tennessee's Jason Layman (second round), at the other. Rodney Thomas had a 947-yard rookie season and he'll be an effective change of pace to George.

Hidden Gem

The Oiler draft of 1995 was a mother lode of surprise talent, the most surprising of which was wide receiver Chris Sanders, a gem mined from Ohio State in the third round. Sanders had a breakthrough second half. Of his 35 catches, nine were for touchdowns. He is Mr. Long Distance, averaging 23.5 yards per catch by far the best mark in the league.

Fisher's inclination toward ball control was evident by his decision to allow Haywood Jeffries, his leading receiver (61 catches for 684 yards and 8 touchdowns), to dangle for months as a free agent. The other returning pass-catching leaders are running back Todd McNair (60) and H-back Frank Wycheck (40). Second-year man Michael Roan may be the blocking tight end.

The Defense Rests

The onus will be on the defense again to shut down the opposition, especially in the first half of the season. With George getting the ball frequently, the defenders should be more rested. If that works, there could be a late surge since the Oilers meet only one 1995 playoff team in the second half.

Even with Eddie Robinson signing with Jacksonville as a free agent, the linebacking remains strong. Veteran Al Smith is an underrated middle backer, with the emerging Micheal Barrow on one side and Joe Bowden, who Fisher thinks will thrive on the other side. Speedy rookie Terry Killens may fit in somewhere. The Oilers had just 30 sacks, but as the two young guns, tackles Anthony Cook (4 1/2 sacks) and Gary Walker mature, that should increase. Henry Ford had 4 1/2 sacks coming from the other end. End Kenny Davidson is better against the run. Rookie Bryant Mxx needs polish but he has pass-rush possibilities.

Secondary to None

This is one of the best secondaries in the NFL. Few defensive backfields support against the run and tackle as well as Houston's. Blaine Bishop, the team's MVP, has quietly emerged as one of the better strong safeties in the league. Houston was one of two AFC teams with at least 20 interceptions, and cornerback Darryll Lewis had six. Bishop and Lewis were selected for the Pro Bowl. Free safety Marcus Robertson had been to the Pro Bowl in the past and he regularly gets into double figures as an open-field tackler. All are young except for cornerback Cris Dishman, who still retains his extraordinary speed while he has lost some of his recklessness. The opposition completed only 52.3 percent of its passes and converted on just 33.5 of its third-down situations, putting Houston in the NFL's top three in the latter category.

Good News/Bad News

Kicker Al Dei Greco was a large part of the offense. The Oilers' leading scorer (114 points), he missed only four of 31 field-goal attempts. His average successful field goal was an AFC-high 38.8 yards. The bad news is that punter Rich Camarillo had a poor year and that long-time return ace Mel Gray is sliding. Gray had five fumbles in his limited handling of the ball.

Without a viable running game, Vinny Testaverde somehow passed for 2,883 yards and 17 touchdowns in the final season in Cleveland.

Baltimore Ravens

During the last six seasons of NFL football in Baltimore, the lamented and departed Colts finished 5-11, 5-11, 7-9, 2-14, 0-8-1 (the strike season of 1982), and 7-9 NFL football is back in Baltimore with the Ravens (formerly the Cleveland Browns), but those bad old days could resemble the good old days unless there are a lot of pleasant surprises. Maybe a change of scenery will create a different atmosphere but the folks in Cleveland's Dawg Pond weren't the only ones who were angry in 1995.

Nevermore

What was supposed to be a drive to the Super Bowl began with a training-camp holdout by all-star safety Eric Turner which seemed to set the tone for the last, sour season on the shore of Lake Erie. Later Turner was injured and missed most of the year.

Then free-agent wide receiver Andre Rison, for whom owner Art Modell went into hock to meet his $17 million price tag, became just another guy in a soggy passing game. Rison, never one to conceal his unhappiness, went public with his complaints. That was followed by a disastrous brainstorm by ex-coach Bill Belichick, who toyed with quarterback Vinny Testaverde's fragile psyche by benching him in favor of rookie Eric Zeier, who had one good game and then self-destructed.

On the Sidelines

Even after the change in cities and a further change in coaches, plus the new name, the Ravens by any name stayed unhappy. Left tackle Tony Jones, supposedly one of the few leaders on this team, sucked his thumb when UCLA offensive lineman Jonathan Ogden, among the premium prizes of the '96 draft, was selected by his team.

Into this dangerous breach steps Ted Marchibroda, who nearly coaxed the over-achieving Indianapolis Colts into the Super Bowl. Marchibroda, with a reputation for getting his players to perform at high throttle for him, will need all the cajoling, charm, persuasion, and who knows what else to get this bunch of prima donnas to go all out.

Comfort Zone

Look for Marchibroda to attempt to put Testaverde in a comfort zone with the no-huddle offense where there is more emphasis on instinct and less on thinking. Why not? No Cleve and runner gained 550 yards last year and Leroy Hoard (547 yards and no touchdowns on just 136 carries) isn't about to become an overnight star. Veterans Earnest Byner (432 yards) and Lorenzo White (163 yards) combined for three TDs. The Ravens, who scored only five rushing touchdowns, didn't draft a running back. It was Marchibroda's deal to install the no-huddle when he was offensive coordinator in Buffalo, where the Bills carried it to four Super Bowls.

Without a viable running game, Testaverde somehow passed for 2,883 yards and 17 touchdowns with 10 interceptions. His quarterback rating of 87.8 was third best in the conference and 10th in the NFL. Zeier, thrown into the fire, completed just over 50 percent of his passes with more than twice as many interceptions (9) as TDs (4). Zeier was also sacked 15 times or two fewer than Testaverde, who attempted 231 more passes.

Center Stage

Rison owes Model and his quarterbacks a big season. His signing signaled much sound and fury but signified very little. He caught a modest 47 passes for 701 yards and just three touchdowns following a he'll help somewhere. What Marchbroda needs most, though, is a big contribution from the disappointing Derrick Alexander, whose output dropped from 48 catches for 828 yards in 1994 to 15 for 216 a year ago. The best tight end in the organization remains Ozzie Newsome. The problem is, the personnel boss retired as a player five years ago.

Their Great Legacy Lives On!!!

Drop-Off

No unit of the Browns suffered from franchise-jump depression as much as the offensive line. Two years ago, it allowed just 14 sacks. Last year that figure inflated to 32 and its work in the running game was far from glittering. Ogden will be installed at left guard, alongside Jones. Center Steve Everitt needs to rebound from a disappointing year. Bob Dahl is the right guard with Orlando Brown at right tackle.

The pass rush slipped from 38 sacks in '94 to 29 and it's still a matter of the two starting defensive ends, Anthony Pleasant, who had eight sacks, and Rob Burnett, who had 7 1/2. The interior of the line is wanting, with Tim Goad, far from his Cincinnati peak, and Dan Footman, whose switch from end hasn't taken.

What the linebacking needs is swift development from Craig Powell, last year's surprise No. 1 draftee who held out, got hurt early, and then missed the final 13 games with a knee injury. Dexter Daniels from Florida's SEC champs, was drafted in the sixth round. Pepper Johnson still makes plays in the middle, but Gerald Dixon was lost to Cincinnati. Mike Caldwell is the other veteran starter. The outlook would be brighter if the University of Miami's speedy Ray Lewis, also a No. 1 pick, can make an immediate impact. Carl Banks at 34 is on the slippery slope.

Dubious Strength

If Turner is O.K., the Ravens' secondary is a strength since Antonio Langham is one of the better cornerbacks. Still, only Cincinnati and New England in the AFC had a worse ranking for pass defense. Tennessee Rookie DeRon Jenkins, for whom the Ravens traded three picks to Denver in order to move up in the draft, may push aging corner Don Griffin Safety Stevon Moore had five interceptions and Vashone Adams, an undrafted rookie, stepped in to play well in Turner's place.

Playing the Percentages

Matt Stover's field-goal percentage, 87.9 on 29 of 33, was the best in the AFC, but his average attempt, 33.7 yards, was the shortest. Punter Tom Tupa signed with New England. The kickoff-return game was flabby and the punt returning was done by committee, which turned in a favorable 10.2-yard average.

Kansas City Chiefs

Last spring, in a poll of 14 AFC coaches, the Kansas City Chiefs were the popular choice to repeat as conference champions. Why? The almost unanimous answer was something like, "From what they did last season. They had the best record in the league."

Disappointing Finish

The Chiefs' 13-3 record was the best in the NFL, and only the absence of a reliable field-goal kicker prevented them, rather than the Colts, from dueling the Steelers for the right to represent the AFC in the Super Bowl. The name of Lin Elliott will live in infamy in Kansas City after he missed three field goals in a 10-7 loss to the Colts, right in Arrowhead Stadium, an arena which defines the term "home-field advantage."

TOYASSO DE ROSA

Tamarick Vanover, the rookie who had three touchdowns on returns, could elevate the Chiefs' passing game.

Yet the doubters say there is more to the Chiefs' disappointment than kicking. There is a suspicion that Kansas City is spotlight-shy. Two of the three losses came down the stretch against playoff teams, in nationally televised games. There was the Thanksgiving Day loss to the Cowboys in Dallas followed by a Monday night loss to the Dolphins in Miami. The spotlight will shine on K.C. frequently this season.

Pro Bono

Then there is quarterback Steve Bono, one of the best stories of the 1995 season. After spending all of his NFL career as a backup, Bono became the surprise answer to what ailed the Chiefs offensively after Joe Montana retired. Kansas City won three overtime games in the first six weeks of the season with Bono the spark, and the entire team was energized by the experience. Yet Bono sagged down the stretch. He was intercepted three times in the second half of the playoff loss to Indy. For the season, he completed over 56 percent of his passes for 3,121 yards and 21 touchdowns with 10 interceptions.

Defense Is the Difference

Finally there is doubt about the coach, Marty Schottenheimer. There is no doubt that he can make bad teams better and mediocre teams first-rate. It's what happens in the postseason which hangs over his career. He is 5-9 in the playoffs at Cleveland and Kansas City. Not only is there doubt about his ability to win the big one, but also the semifinals and quarterfinals.

Yet, in a similar poll of coaches a year earlier, the Chiefs were picked to finish last in the AFC West. Overall, the big difference was defense. The Chiefs allowed only 241 points in 1995, 57 fewer than they had the year before. More significantly, they were 86 points stingier than Pittsburgh and allowed nearly 100 fewer than Buffalo, the other AFC division champions. Kansas City surrendered no more than seven rushing touchdowns. The Chiefs allowed Indianapolis just 10 points in their playoff game, too, but the Colts won

Money on the Line

The Chiefs didn't change much between seasons. They put their free-agent money on the line. More specifically, in the retention of the interior of their offensive line center Tim Grunhard and guards Wil Shields and Dave Szott. Many think it was a wise move, since the line is the strength of this team.

The Chiefs won the NFL ground-gaining title without a 1,000-yard rusher. Schottenheimer's formula is to do it by committee. Marcus Allen ran for 890 yards, Greg Hill for 667, and fullback Kimble Anders, selected to the Pro Bowl, for 398. Even Bono had a 76-yard bootleg for a touchdown against Arizona. Grunhard, Szott, and Shields were a big part of that. Schottenheimer thinks Shields can be one of the NFL's next great guards. Since last year's top draftee, Trezelle Jenkins, was active for just one game, John Alt and Jeff Criswell must do most of the playing at tackle.

Playmakers

Yet as important as offensive lines are, playmakers are still needed. The question about Bono is whether 1995 was the one spectacular season in an otherwise mediocre career or whether he is a late bloomer, ready to step up to that famous "next level" at the age of 34. Allen is 36, and he accounted for about 40 percent of the Chiefs' offense in the playoff game.

The passing attack is about as exciting as a Bob Dole campaign speech. Anders was the top receiver/catcher, with 55 receptions that averaged 6.3 yards. Tight end Keith Cash was next, with 42 that averaged 10 yards. Lake Dawson and Webster Slaughter are mostly possession catchers and the most dangerous veteran, Willie Davis, signed with Houston.

What could put high-octane into the passing game is the development of Tamarick Vanover, the ex-Florida State star who came down from the Canadian League to terrify every special-teams coach in the NFL. As a rookie, Vanover scored three touchdowns on returns (two kickoffs and one punt). He caught only 11 passes, but two of them were for scores. He's scary.

Sack Time

The Chiefs recorded 47 sacks, second only to the Bills in the AFC. The big two, end Neil Smith (12 sacks) and linebacker Derrick Thomas (8), were joined by a third, tackle Dan Saleaumua (7), who provided the toughest inside pass rush in the league. Gunther Cunningham, the new defensive coordinator, turned things loose, and the result was havoc in the opposition's backfield. Joe Phillips is a strong and savvy tackle and Vaughn Booker, the ex-Canadian Leaguer, beat out Darren Mickell, now a Saint, at the other end.

Thomas is the best known of the Chiefs' linebackers. Tracy Simien starts in the middle and George Jamison on the left side, but Anthony Davis is developing while Troy Dumas and Jerrold Willard, 1995 draftees, return from injured reserve. UCLA star Donnie Edwards came in the current draft crop.

Drafting From Strength

corner and Brian Washington at strong safety. Mark Collins, who reconsidered his retirement, is the free safety, with William White in reserve. For a team that was No. 1 on defense, the Chiefs had an odd draft. The top four picks were defenders. The first, Jerome Woods, could contend as a safety. The second, Reggie Tongue, also figures in the competition.

JOE RIDLEY

Speedster Joey Galloway is a game-breaking receiver who forces defenses to adjust to him.

Seattle Seahawks

They don't cotton to carpet-baggers, particularly those from California in the Northwest. That's why Ken Behring was always eyed warily in Seattle after he bought the Seahawks. Wary turned to rage last winter when Behring, claiming intense jitters about the possibilities of an earthquake up north, tried to move the Seahawks somewhere near the San Andreas Fault.

Normally, Seattle should be a team on the make with all its young stars and ambitious coach, Dennis Erickson. Stability started to go down the tubes when Behring ordered the off-season training and all the equipment to be shipped down to Anaheim. Erickson's big plans exploded in his face.

Stability in Seattle

But local billionaire Paul Allen has an option to buy out Behring that extends beyond this season, so the Seahawks appear set to stay in Seattle. If stability does return, the team could surge even this season since it thrives on home ownership. The franchise's most successful days were under the original owners, the Nordstrom family.

The Seahawks could use a little stability. They haven't made the playoffs since 1988. But now the roster is populated by young stars: running back Chris Warren, wide receiver Joey Galloway, defensive tackles Cortez Kennedy and Sam Adams, and Rick Mirer, the work-in-progress at quarterback.

Winning Style

In the last half of the season, Seattle was 6-2 on its way to an 8-8 record after a 2-6 start. Not bad for a team with a rookie pro coach who underwent a traumatic quarterback change and then suffered a franchise owner with itchy feet. The Seahawks scored at least 26 points in seven of their victories.

The late-season improvement was understandable. Erickson had no NFL experience before he took the Seattle job. Neither did seven of his assistants. It was on-the-job education for the boss and his aides. Erickson owns Coach of the Year awards from the Pac-10, Big East, and Big Sky Conferences. In his entire head coaching career, beginning at the University of Idaho in 1982, he had only one losing season. He's a quick study.

Quarterback Draw

The shakiest part of the closing streak was that Mirer, who many think is the franchise, lost his job to journeyman John Friesz. Erickson, to his credit, stabilized matters right after the season by declaring that Mirer would return in 1996 as the starter, despite Friesz's sound play. One of the NFL newcomers on Erickson's staff was quarterbacks coach Rich Olson. Mirer and Olson are still getting to know each other, but in his 19-year college coaching career, Olson worked for such luminaries as Jim Sweeney, John Robinson, Ron Meyer and Lou Holtz, so he knows something about dealing with young quarterbacks.

Mirer got lost in Erickson's new offense, throwing almost as many interceptions as he had in his first two pro seasons. He also was sacked 42 times. Friesz became the great stabilizer. "Physically, he's got all the tools," said Erickson of Mirer. "He's going to be successful in this league. It's just a matter of time." At the same time, the coach reserves the right to use Friesz, whom he considered a playoff-caliber quarterback again if Mirer needs bailing out.

Game-Breakers

Galoway, world-class fast, had a strong rookie year with 67 catches for 1,039 yards and seven touchdowns, along with an 89-yard punt return for a touchdown. He's a game-breaker who causes opposing defensive coordinators to adjust to him. The other receiver, Brian Blades, was also a 1,000-yard man on his 77 catches, but his future is clouded by a manslaughter conviction in Florida. An undistinguished group of reserves caught just 23 passes among them. So the Seahawks could be scrambling for help. Tight ends is a hybrid. Between them, Carlester Crumpler and Christ an Fauria, two youngsters, caught 40 passes.

The beauty part of the Seattle offense is that it's well-balanced. Chris Warren produced 1,346 yards, second in the AFC, and 15 touchdowns. The line, coached by the well-regarded veteran Howard Mudd, does a precision job of creating opportunities for Warren, who knows how to seize the moment.

Major Overhaul

Not so beautiful was the pass protection. This season there will be a major overhaul in the interior of the offensive line. Kevin Mawae moves from guard to center, the position for which he was originally drafted. Derrick Graham signed from Carolina, becomes the right guard, with the No. 1 draftee, Pete Kendall, at left guard. Jim Sweeney, who started at center, becomes the swing man at guard and center. Howard Ballard is one tackle. With Ray Roberts having signed with Detroit, James Atkins becomes the permanent tackle on the other side.

Tightening Up

The defense allowed 21 of its 26 touchdown passes in the first nine games. Overall, the defense surrendered 354 yards per game. The second-half improvement was at the expense of five of the league's poorest offenses (Giants, Jets, Jaguars, Eagles, and Redskins). This year the schedule substitutes such exposure teams as Green Bay, Minnesota, Miami, and Detroit.

Erickson worked a trade for Glenn Montgomery of Houston, bolstering a unit which already boasted Pro Bowler Cortez Kennedy and Sam Adams. The pass rush produced just 28 sacks. End Michael Sinclair had 5 1/2, but there isn't much else from the outside. The other end is Antonio Edwards. The linebacking is solid with Terry Wooden, Winston Moss, and Dean Wells.

Safety First

The major improvement on the defense is in the secondary. Darryl Williams, the slick free safety from Cincinnati, was signed. He should take over for Eugene Robinson. The Seahawks applied the franchise designa-

Thousands of songbirds, shorebirds, geese, and cranes crowd the flyways from South America to the Arctic every season. But the wetland rest-stops they need to refuel along the way are disappearing. The Nature Conservancy has created an award-winning computerized network to help us guarantee sufficient "service stations" along these birds' travel routes. • Whether it's manatees in Florida, pine barrens in New York, or quetzals in Costa Rica, The Nature Conservancy protects the lands and waters that rare species need to survive. Odomes, who suffered knee injuries before each of the last two seasons and never suited up for the Seahawks, was pronounced 100 percent at the team's spring mini-camp, but he was untested by contact. Odomes went to the Pro Bowl in his final two seasons as a Bear.

Special Delivery

Punter Rick Tuten's 45-yard average led the league. Todd Peterson hit 23 of 28 field goals in his debut. Galloway and Steve Broussard make the return game dangerous, but the coverage needs improvement.

Beyond Kendall, it was a faceless draft but Erickson thinks he'll get eventual use out of Tennessee-Martin defensive back Fred Thomas, Rutgers tackle Robert Barr, Fresno State running back Reggie Brown, Georgia defensive end Phillip Daniels, and Wisconsin linebacker Eric Unverzagt.

Oakland Raiders

At first the Raiders were happy to be back in Oakland. Later they were both fat and happy. In the first half of the season, only one opposing runner gained 100 yards against them. In the second half, there were a half dozen runners who gained at least 100 yards against them. And what appeared to be a certain spot in the playoffs became a mortifying lost opportunity during a season-ending six-game losing streak.

Let's Get Physical

That old Silver and Black magic was not recaptured at Oakland-Alameda County Stadium. On the contrary, Oakland fans who had far better memories of the team spoke of the Raiders of the '90s as "wimps" and "heartless." Coach Mike White later admitted that his team "was not physical" down the stretch. That's one reason the Raiders spent their free-agency money on defense, signing two Dallas starters, cornerback Larry Brown and tackle Russell Maryland. Neither is a superstar, but Maryland's work ethic may do something to spur the incumbent tackles, Chester McGlockton and Jerry Ball, who were so well-fed in the second half that there wasn't a hint of hunger.

ROBERT LEITER

When he was healthy, Jeff Hostetler had the Raiders headed for the playoffs. He needs better protection if they are to be contenders again.

Hoss and Billy Joe

There was an expectation of a more dramatic move. That is, a new quarterback. The word was that team owner Al Davis lusted for Jim Harbaugh, the Colts' comeback star, but in the end the Raiders settled on 35-year-old Jeff Hostetler, despite his battered state. Davis had no choice. White hasn't done a sufficient development job on Billy Joe Hobert, who ended up starting at the end of last season. The Raiders tried to pretend that Vince Evans is the incarnation of George Blanda. He isn't.

The Raiders could do a lot worse than Hoss. He's a survivor and his teams usually survive along with him. He came into the NFL as the Giants' third-round bargain in 1984, came out of the shadows to win the 1990 Super Bowl, and then made the Raiders respectable again. Despite his injuries last year, he completed over 60 percent of his throws for 1,998 yards and 12 touchdowns and finished with a passer rating (82.2) higher than any AFC West quarterback except Denver's John Elway. The Raiders were headed for the playoffs when Hostetler was healthy. He grew to like the West Coast offense, too.

Caught in the Draft

Davis is doing his best to help Hostetler. He maneuvered in the draft to get Rickey Dudley, the huge Ohio State tight end who eventually could give them the sort of performances they once got from Raymond Chester, Dave Casper, and Todd Christensen. Oakland does not like to play rookies, but exceptions are made in rare cases. Dudley may be one of those cases. The tight end means too much to the preservation of Hostetler's body not to use Dudley a great deal, if not start him.

Protection

His blockers almost got Hostetler killed last year. He needs much better protection if the Raiders are to be a serious contender. Tackle Gerald Perry never seems to be able to decide whether he wants to stay or leave. When he's good he's very good. Steve Wniewski made the Pro Bowl again. Kevin Gogan is the other guard. Barret Robbins should make a bid to be the starting center in his second season. Charles McRae, a flop in Philadelphia, was signed to compete for the starting job at right tackle. The Raiders also traded with New England for tackle Pat Harlow.

Harvey Williams ran for a fairly quiet 1,114 yards. Last year's No. 1 draft choice, Napoleon Kaufman, showed promise with 490 yards and a 4.5-yard per-carry average. He was third in the NFL in kickoff returns (26.0).

Tim Brown

Raiders of the Lost Arc

Davis reluctantly allowed White to run the West Coast offense last season despite the presence of all those sprinters on his wide-out roster. Pro Bowler Tim Brown was the only one who flourished, with 89 catches and 10 touchdowns. The Raiders are getting impatient with Rocket Ismail, whose 28 catches and three scores don't pay the rent. Williams was the next-leading receiver with 54 catches, mostly dinks.

Untraditional

If the coaches can't find some way to make more dramatic use of the Rocket, Hostetler may rely more heavily on Daryl Hobbs, a possesson receiver who can run after the catch. Hobbs developed somewhat last year, averaging 16.1 yards on his 38 receptions and scoring three touchdowns.

Defensive Swoon

The Raiders' defensive statistics don't appear alarming at first notice, but check out the scores in that swoon at the end. In five of the games, the defense surrendered at least 29 points. The other game was a 12-6 loss to San Diego. The Raiders still have the potential for big-pay defense. They had 43 sacks, many of them early. Except for Buffalo's Bryce Paup, no defensive free agent had more impact than Pat Swilling, who was signed just before the season began and then contributed 13 sacks. Anthony Smith, the other end, had seven and McGlockton 7 1/2. Aundray Bruce is available. Maryland could make Jerry Ball expendable.

Cornering the Market

Cornerback Terry McDaniel made his fourth straight appearance in the Pro Bowl, but Larry Brown may push Albert Lewis aside to safety. Eddie Anderson and Derrick Hoskins, neither of whom had an outstanding year, are the incumbent safeties. Lorenzo Lynch was signed for the Cardinals for $1 million a year to play strong safety. He accounted for one of Arizona's four victories last year when he returned an interception 72 yards for a touchdown to beat Seattle in overtime.

On Average

Both pace-kicker Jeff Jaeger (13 of 18 field goals) and punter Jeff Gossett (41.2-yard average) had mediocre years. Kaufman returned a kickoff for a touchdown but the Rocket didn't average 20 yards per return. Tim Brown was among the AFC's leading punt returners.

Junior Seau, the Chargers' superstar linebacker, sets the tone for the entire defense with his all-out play.

San Diego Chargers

The cast keeps changing, but this time the turnover may have been injurious to the Chargers' playoff chances. You can barely recognize this team from the squad that played in the Super Bowl just two years ago.

Discharged

Natrone Means, the one-time wonder back was run off. Leslie O'Neal who accounted for a third of the Chargers' sacks, is now a St. Louis Ram. Harry Swayne, the offensive tackle for whom the Chargers matched a big offer sheet from Arizona three years ago was run off. Collectively, 156 pass receptions were jettisoned, with two receivers Mark Seay and Shawn Jefferson, and the long-time third-down back, Ronnie Harmon, exiled. Dennis Gibson, the linebacker whose diving pass deflection sent the Chargers to their only Super Bowl, was put on the street.

GM Tough

Bobby Beathard, the well-respected general manager, has played the football lottery for a few years. Weeks after the Super Bowl loss to San Francisco, both safeties were gone. Beathard regularly trades next year's first-round draft pick for someone he likes in the second round.

Beathard is a tough man to second-guess, but right now the Chargers look a little hollow. In fact they looked hollow last Thanksgiving when they stood in last place in the AFC West with a 4-7 record. Then they began to play improved defense, won some tight games, and ended up in the playoffs again. A repeat of that feat will be difficult.

Solid State

The Chargers really don't have one particular strength any longer. They are sort of middle of the road in everything. They still have a superstar linebacker in Junior Seau, a steady quarterback in Stan Humphries, a strong kicking game, and about a dozen other solid starters. The rest are mostly players with potential yet unrealized. It doesn't add up to serious contender.

Beathard is placing a lot of the Chargers' eggs in the basket of coach Bobby Ross, who has established a reputation as a strong motivator and teacher. The teacher part will be essential this season since he will be using so many inexperienced players.

Glorious Tradition

The Chargers' history is filled with glorious wide receivers like Hal of Famers Lance Alworth and Charlie Joiner, Anthony Miller, Gary Garrison, and Wes Chandler. None of them ever caught as many passes in one season as Tony Martin did last year. 90

Martin is Beathard's triumph. The GM traded a draft choice to Miami for Martin, who had diligently worked his way up through the development squads with the Jets and the Dolphins.

Now Martin has to be prepared for blanket coverages. The position across from him will be occupied by Jimmy Oliver, Bryan Still, or Omar Ellison. Among them they have a total of two career catches in the NFL. Oliver, hurt most of his rookie season, and Still, the top draft choice, would look fine on a 400-meter relay team. Neither is big or had outstanding college careers. It's their speed which attracted Beathard. Still had a great game for Virginia Tech against Texas in the Sugar Bowl, scoring on a long pass play and breaking open the game with a 60-yard punt return.

Andre Coleman, the spectacular kick returner, is a possibility despite just three receptions a year ago. The draft also brings Brian Roche, a pass-catching tight end, which is rare now for the Chargers. He had 66 receptions for San Jose State in '95. Alfred Pupunz is the blocking tight end.

Offensive Charge

Quarterback Stan Humphres gets the job done. He didn't finish among the top 10 passers, but it was he who led the late-season push. The Chargers averaged 28 points in the last four games. They scored as many as that only once in the previous 12 games. Humphres threw for 3,381 yards and 17 touchdowns with 14 interceptions.

Humphres received decent protection, but there is a major worry about the most important line position: left tackle. The plan is to play either Tony Bert, who was inactive for all but one game as a rookie, or Troy Sienkiewicz, who didn't play at all. If that doesn't work, Vaughn Parker, who won the starting job at right tackle only late last season, could be switched to the left side. Still in the development stage, Parker is a better pass blocker than run blocker.

Courtney Hall is the anchor at center with Eric Moten and Joe Cocozzo at the guards. No premium draft choices were used for offensive linemen.

Backfield in Motion

Means was dropped because Ross feels that Aaron Hayden will perform just about as well in the running attack. Hayden, whose college career at Tennessee was limited because of injuries and the presence of Charlie Garner and James Stewart, carried 128 times as a rookie and gained 470 yards. He doesn't appear to have Means's burst. His longest run was 20 yards. Terrell Fletcher, who replaces Harmon as the third-down back, caught only three passes as a rookie and carried the ball just 26 times. That's a big drop from Harmon's 63 receptions and 51 carries.

Positive Notes

The most positive defensive note of the off-season was the signing of Miami pass rusher Marco Coleman, who starred for Ross at Georgia Tech. The Chargers think he'll put some fizz in the pass rush, but he didn't do that consistently with the Dolphins. He recorded 6 1/2 sacks for a team that required much more.

With O'Neal gone, the most impressive incumbent pass rusher is tackle Shawn Lee, who had eight sacks and became a priority for the Chargers to re-sign. Reuben Davis is a fine partner for Lee inside. Chris Mims was out of shape and needed an attitude adjustment last season, but if he gets his act together, he could be the best man in this group. Raylee Johnson may be about to blossom at the other end.

Setting the Tone

Seau sets the tone for the entire defense and the best thing that might happen to San Diego is for him to play the entire season in a healthy state. Kurt Gouveia, a smart veteran who had a good year for Philadelphia, was signed as a free agent and will probably start in the middle. The other outside assignment is a lossup among Lewis Bush, Glenn Young, and rookies Patrick Sapp.

Cornerback is a major strength with

Dwayne Harper, Willie Clark, Terrance Shaw, and Darren Gordon, who returns after missing the season due to shoulder surgery. Shaun Gayle and Kevin Ross, signed from Atlanta, bring experience to the safety positions.

Special Players

Except for the coverage on kicks, special teams is in good shape. Australian Darren Bennett, the wonder punter, went to the Pro Bowl. John Carney, not a distance kicker, still had another good year with a 21-for-26 performance. Coleman, who led the AFC in punt returns, scored twice on kickoff returns and once with a punt. He terrifies both the opposition and the Chargers, since he fumbled 10 times.

DAVE BLACK

Denver Broncos

The assignment for Mike Shanahan, the Broncos coach, is fairly basic. Just one game separated the second-place team in the AFC West, San Diego, from the three teams below it, all of whom finished 8-8. If Shanahan hopes to avoid falling to the bottom of the division, he needs to do something about his defense.

Denver Gets Defensive

The Broncos scored 388 points, which trailed only Pittsburgh and Miami in the AFC. Yet they surrendered 27 points or more in eight games. Their record in those games was 1-7.

Shanahan tried hard to bring about improvement. He signed a couple of free agents, pass rusher Alfred Williams and middle linebacker Bill Romanowski. His first draft choice was the best small-college player on the board, linebacker John Mobley of Kutztown State, whom most NFL scouts saw as a potential super pass rusher. But it wasn't enough. The deal Shanahan wanted to make most, a trade for Arizona strongman Eric Swann, never came off because of the Cardinals' exorbitant price tag.

So Mobley will see a lot of playing time, maybe before he's ready, because Denver has no other choice. Fingers will be kept crossed that Williams, an underachiever in the pros, will be revitalized by his return to Colorado, where he starred as a collegian. He lives about 40 minutes from the Broncos' complex. Romanowski, who played for the 49ers when Shanahan coached there brings leadership as well as experience.

Turning the Corner

There is another Bronco negative statistic that's even more startling. In a streak that's still alive, Denver cornerbacks have not intercepted a pass in 20 consecutive games. Despite the dubious streak, the coaches felt the two incumbent cornerbacks, veterans Lionel Washington and Ray Crockett, "played well enough." Nevertheless, Shanahan spent a second-round draft choice on corner Tory James of LSU, who intercepted two passes in 1995. The Broncos had just eight all season. Longtime star Steve Atwater remains the free safety with Tyrone Braxton, his partner at strong safety.

Sack Time

The blame went on the lack of pass rush. Denver's most reliable sack man, Simon Fletcher, retired. Williams, who is expected to replace Fletcher, had 4 1/2 sacks for the 49ers. Shanahan has no choice but to give the Broncos' own disappointment, Dan Martin, another chance at end. Tackle Michael Dean Perry cost a lot when he came over from Cleveland last year and did not deliver, although he did lead the team with six sacks. James Jones, who came from the Browns with Perry, was more of a disappointment and will have to fight off rookie Mark Campbell among others.

Romanowski is flanked by outside linebackers Allen Aldridge and Jet Castoff. Glenn Cadrez, although Mobley may have something to say about that.

John Elway

Where Denver makes hay is on offense. John Elway, age 36, remains the present and future Bronco quarterback, having signed a contract that takes him to the year 2000, if he chooses to stand tall in the pocket that long. Last year he didn't play like a middle-aged quarterback. He passed for the most yards in the AFC (3,970) and 26 touchdowns. No AFC team was close to the Broncos' average of 377 yards per game in total offense. Denver was the No. 3 offense in the NFL, behind Detroit and San Francisco.

Elway doesn't wander from the pocket as much as he used to, a though he can be dangerous when he does decide to move. These days he doesn't have to run as much. After being sacked 85 times in the two previous seasons, he was dropped only 22 times a year ago. That's the same number of sacks Dan Marino, annually among the best protected quarterbacks, endured in Miami—and Elway attempted 60 more passes than Marino.

Quarterback coach Gary Kubiak was sent scouting last spring to uncover Elway's eventual successor. The Broncos think he was successful. They drafted Jeff Lewis of Northern Arizona, who had the same sort of numbers Elway had when he played at Stanford.

Hidden Gem

The Broncos had the surprise running back in the NFL in sixth-round draftee Terrell Davis, who gained 1,117 yards and tied Dallas's Emmitt Smith for the second-best per-rush average (4.7 yards) among the league's top 10 ground-gainers. Backup Aaron Craver averaged 4.6 yards on his 73 carries, which says something about the Denver offensive line and its coach, Alex Gibbs.

Pro Bowl left tackle Gary Zimmerman resigned, despite off-season shoulder surgery and a few thoughts about retirement. He didn't miss a play last year. Grit is the word, too, for right guard Mark Schlereth, who had a kidney stone removed on a Sunday, then played a Monday night game against the Raiders. (The Broncos won.) The coaches think center Tom Nalen is a future All-Pro. Brian Habib is the left guard and Broderick Thompson the right tackle. Jamie Brown is a promising young tackle.

Miller Time

It took a year, but Anthony Miller finally played like the All-Pro receiver the Broncos paid so dearly for in 1994. His catches actually dropped by one (to 59) and his yardage (1,079) was less than he had in his first season in Denver, but the scoreboard became brighter when his touchdown total jumped from five to 14. He is the man Elway looks for when the Broncos reach the red zone.

Ed McCaffrey is a possession receiver who played for Shanahan in San Francisco and had 39 catches in his first season as a Bronco. Rod Smith beat Washington early in the season with a clutch catch, then disappeared. He becomes more important this fall. Ex-Giant Mike Sherrard, the most sure-handed receiver in the league, was signed as a free agent. Shannon Sharpe is starting to show wear and tear, but the Pro Bowl tight end caught 63 passes for 756 yards.

Special Teams

Glyn Milburn sent his cleats and jersey to the Hall of Fame when he set an NFL record of more than 400 all-purpose yards in a game last season, but then Shanahan sent Milburn to Detroit for two draft choices. The new return man is Mike Pringle, who tore up the Canadian League the last two years.

Denver's kicking game is in good shape. Jason Elam was the best long-distance kicker in the AFC, converting five of seven field goals at 50 yards or more. His 56-yarder was the longest in the conference. Tom Rouen punted for a 42.2-yard average and a solid net of 37.6.

Fantasy Football

by DENNIS LEPORE LAKE COUNTY (OHIO) NEWS-HERALD

The beauty of fantasy football lies in its simplicity: You draft your team and root for it to score. The fun lies in watching your team perform on TV every week while keeping score of your opponents' progress.

Most leagues are made up of 10-16 teams stocked with two quarterbacks, 3-4 running backs, 4-6 receivers, a kicker, and either a defense or individual defensive players. Teams are matched in a head-to-head schedule during the regular season, followed by a fantasy playoff system. Starting lineups are called in weekly, with trading and free-agent pickups also allowed during the season.

Basic leagues count six points for just touchdowns while performance leagues award one point for every 10 rushing and receiving yards and for every 20 passing yards. Additional points for rushing attempts, receptions, and long scoring plays are optional. Super-advanced leagues use extra categories such as interceptions, fumbles, sacks, tackles, and special-teams scores. Draft preparations vary according to the league's scoring rules.

No matter how you play, fantasy football can be a rewarding hobby that will increase your knowledge and appreciation of the players and the sport.

Sleeper Running Backs

DONNELL BENNETT, Chiefs If he is fully recovered from knee surgery, he will be a force in the backfield—both on short yardage and passing situations.

JEROME BETTIS, Steelers Bettis is looking to rebound after two off-years with the Rams. He still has the ability but needs to report in top physical condition and be motivated.

TERRELL DAVIS, Broncos An above-average all-round talent held back due to a nagging hamstring problem in college, Davis came on in training camp, won the starting job, and had a productive '95 season. Expect further improvement this year.

TERRELL FLETCHER, Chargers Fletcher has decent speed and hands and is being groomed as Ronnie Harmon's replacement—a third-down specialist.

AARON HAYDEN, Chargers A hard driver with above-average skills (except for blocking), Hayden emerged when Natrone Means got hurt and averaged 90 yards per game down the stretch. He's the main man now that Means is gone.

GARRISON HEARST, Cardinals He has been hitting the weights and is reportedly in top physical condition now, two years removed from serious knee surgery. He could be traded, however, for needed depth.

NAPOLEON KAUFMAN, Raiders A hard worker who has the potential to develop into an electrifying all-purpose back, Kaufman is an excellent return man but must work on his receiving skills. He is small but has speed and is incredibly strong for his size.

TERRY KIRBY, Dolphins Miami is expected to feature this talented all-purpose back.

ADRIAN MURRELL, Jets This flashy speedster emerged as the Jets' all-purpose back last year. His output will increase due to the improvement of the team's offensive line.

RASHAAN SALAAM, Bears Strong with great speed, he's quick to the hole, picks up his blockers well, and is tough around the goal line. He made vast improvements as a rookie, which should carry over to this year.

ROBERT SMITH, Vikings Smith has seen limited duty because of nagging knee and hip problems. He had knee surgery in 1993 so he must improve his durability as well as his work ethic. He has good outside speed but could be traded.

JAMES STEWART, Jaguars Stewart is not flashy but gets the job done, especially in short-yardage situations. He's a tough back who knows how to pick up his blockers and also doubles as a fine receiver. He lacks breakaway speed, needs work on his blocking, and will battle Natrone Means for playing time.

RAY ZELLARS, Saints The fullback not only has above-average blocking abilities but has proven very agile for his size. He's strong with good moves and can power it in at the goal line.

Sleeper Wide Receivers

FRED BARNETT, Dolphins The talented Barnett will explode this year finally teaming with a top quarterback in Dan Marino.

VINCENT BRISBY, Patriots The arrival of the speedy Shawn Jefferson will stretch the defenses enough for Brisby and Ben Coates to run proper routes. Look for Brisby to have his coming-out season.

OMAR ELLISON, Chargers With Mark Seay and Shawn Jefferson gone, somebody will have to take their place. Ellison has big-play potential but must learn to separate himself better from coverage. That should come with experience.

BERT EMANUEL, Falcons Scouts love the former Rice QB's potential. Now in his third season, he is becoming more polished and an integral part of Atlanta's Red Gun attack.

JOEY GALLOWAY, Seahawks A little small, he has explosive speed and unusually sure hands. Expect further development.

THOMAS LEWIS, Giants Lewis has game-breaking speed and will emerge with Mike Sherrard gone.

KEENAN MCCARDELL, Jaguars The ex-Brown will be one of Jacksonville's main targets.

O.J. McDUFFIE, Dolphins An exciting player with speed who will continue to improve.

JIMMY OLIVER, Chargers Has great speed and could step in as the third-down receiver the Chargers desperately need.

CHRIS SANDERS, Oilers He played in the shadow of Joey Galloway at Ohio State but really came on his senior year and con-injured his progress last season, displaying speed and clutch receiving ability

DEION SANDERS, Cowboys Will be used more frequently at wide receiver this year

FRANK SANDERS, Cardinals Strong and confident, he is a possession receiver capable of making the big play

TORRANCE SMALL, Saints The Saints are looking to utilize his abundant talents more often this year as a replacement for the departed Quinn Early. He has size, sure hands, quick feet and a willingness to perform in heavy traffic

J.J. STOKES, 49ers Scouts love his hands and leaping ability. Not blessed with burner speed, Stokes is extremely athletic and can hold his own with defensive backs. He will get substantially more playing time this year with the release of John Taylor

TAMARICK VANOVER, Chiefs He started to emerge in the second half after suffering shoulder woes early on. Vanover is a tough, athletic type with good hands. His only drawback is the lack of burner speed, but that should not prevent him from making a contribution this year in a starting role

MICHAEL WESTBROOK, Redskins Big, fast, tough, and athletic. Scouts believe he will eventually develop into one of the premier wideouts in the NFL. They love his leaping ability but agree that an improvement in running his routes is a priority

JOHN WILLIAMSON

Sleeper Tight Ends

KYLE BRADY, Jets Though he is not a downfield threat, Brady can outmuscle defenders with his strength. He is also a good blocker and will establish himself with the departure of Johnny Mitchell

MARK BRUENER, Steelers A blue-collar type and prototypical Steeler with above-average skills across the board. He excels with dedicated all-out play on every snap

KEN DILGER, Colts A nice combination of size and agility. Dilger can also catch the ball but must improve his blocking.

CHRISTIAN FAURIA, Seahawks An impressive all-round player, Fauria can block, catch the ball in traffic, and stretch the defense. He will improve as the season progresses

DAVID SLOAN, Lions A fine blocker with sure hands, Sloan will be a more visible target this year. He is not a major threat downfield but can stretch the defense

IRV SMITH, Saints With Wesley Walls gone, Smith will finally establish himself in New Orleans as one of the more productive tight ends in the NFL

Comeback Candidates

FLIPPER ANDERSON, Indianapolis A dangerous downfield threat when healthy, Anderson missed the last 14 games after knee surgery in September. Monitor his progress in training camp

J.J. BIRDEN, Falcons Naggling hamstring and hip injuries ruined his first season with Atlanta. Look for a rebound year in the Falcons' high-powered air attack

DREW BLEDSOE, Patriots Primed for a rebound, he needs a QB coach to smooth out his mechanics after his shoulder injury last year. Bledsoe could also use speedier receivers and better protection in the pocket, but he does have special abilities

KIJANA CARTER, Bengals Carter, the first overall pick in the '95 draft, will be back and Harold Green will be gone, but don't expect a breakout the first year. Carter's recovery from major knee surgery will be a long process, so tuck him away on a reserve roster and be patient throw a block, and catch a pass equally well. He is a confident young man who wants the ball. Monitor his recovery from knee surgery

BARRY FOSTER, FA Foster was cut by Carolina in training camp last year after a dispute over his sprained knee. He says he feels good after sitting out the entire season and is ready to contribute again

RAYMONT HARRIS, Bears Harris will attempt a comeback after breaking his collarbone in week 1 last year. Chicago will throw to its running backs more this season, and that is where he will help

JEFF HOSTETLER, Raiders Hostetler's year was ruined by neck, hand, and shoulder problems with surgery on his left shoulder finally ending his season in December. He will be undervalued in most drafts

JOHNNY JOHNSON, 49ers Johnson, who sat out all of last season when teams refused to meet his contract demands, is a decent runner and excellent receiver out of the backfield. He provides a slight upgrade for the Niners but has been injury-prone

NATRONE MEANS, Jaguars Means is looking for a fresh start with the young Jags, but he must prove worthy by upgrading his work ethic and conditioning habits. He missed the second half last season with a groin injury. This is a make-or-break year for him

MIKE PRITCHARD, Broncos He went down with a kidney injury after only three games in '94 and then struggled with injuries last season. Many fantasy leaguers will forget about Pritchard, but he is healthy once again and should be a red-zone threat in the Denver attack. He is not a burner but is underrated, tough, and reliable

ANDRE REED, Bills The veteran pulled a hamstring at midseason and missed all but two games the rest of the way

STERLING SHARPE, Free Agent One of the top receivers in NFL history, Sharpe will sign with a team if he gets medical clearance after neck surgery

KEVIN TURNER, Eagles One of the better pass-receiving fullbacks, Turner is attempting to rebound from a knee injury that ended his '95 season after the first game

ALEXANDER WRIGHT, Rams He had surgery for a bulging disk last October but returned late in the year and had some big games. A burner who will complement Isaac Bruce

TORONTO STAR

Novelist Thomas Wolfe insisted that you can't go home again. But that's exactly what the Canadian Football League has done. After three chaotic seasons in the United States, the problem-plagued CFL has abandoned its expansion plans and high-tailed it back across the 49th parallel to once again become an all-Canadian entity.

In the process, it has taken the most successful of the U.S. expansion franchises, the Grey Cup champion Baltimore Stallions, and re-stabbed them in Montreal, to bring about yet another rebirth of the Alouettes. Canada's second-largest city hasn't had a team since the Alouettes folded (for the second time) on the eve of the 1987 season. The Als had previously given way to the Concordes in 1982 before experiencing a short revival in 1986. What remains to be seen is whether the Stallions, who began their short stint in Baltimore as the horse with no name, can bring about a successful third flight of the Alouettes.

CFL commissioner Larry Smith, who was a journeyman fullback/slotback with the Alouettes, and team owner Jim Speros, who once tried out unsuccessfully as a linebacker with the club, are excited about the return of a franchise to Montreal. Yet there are many who wonder if the CFL will be any more successful in returning to Montreal than it was in its attempt to sell three-down, 12-man football in the U.S.

The CFL pulled the plug on its failed expansion south of the border on a wickedly cold February day in Edmonton. By then the Southern Division, made up of five U.S. cities, was in a shambles. During the three years of the American experiment, only the Baltimore franchise was able to attract fans in any substantial numbers as it averaged more than 30,000 in both years of its existence.

The Gold Miners, the first American-based franchise, joined the league in 1993. But they managed less than 17,000 fans per game in each of their two years in Sacramento, and owner Fred Anderson moved the club to San Antonio last season. He didn't fare lot better there, either.

The Shreveport Pirates and the Las Vegas Posse joined the league, along with Baltimore, in 1994. The Posse, however, were about as successful as a novice at a blackjack table on the neon strip. They barely survived to the end of the season as attendance dwindled to an embarrassing handful of spectators.

Determined to make a go of expansion, the CFL added the Memphis Mad Dogs and the Birmingham Barracudas in time for the 1995 season. With Federal Express founder Fred Smith bankrolling the Mad Dogs and retired real estate baron Art Williams footing the bills in Birmingham, the league felt it finally had the deep-pocketed owners it needed to succeed.

The CFL found out all too soon that deep pockets alone cannot sustain a franchise or entice fans to the ballpark. There was initial interest in both cities, but attendances plunged to between 4,200 and 8,000 by the second half of the season.

The Mad Dogs' gregarious president and head coach, Pepper Rodgers, said the main reason for the league's failure in the U.S. was the lack of television exposure.

"The people down here have never even seen three-down football," he said. "Never mind our games. We never get to see Toronto play Edmonton or Saskatchewan play B.C. If they had been able to see some CFL games on television over the years, it would have helped. If [the NFL] didn't televise games in Memphis, the fans wouldn't know squat about the Dallas Cowboys."

Because of the uncertainty over which teams would be in the CFL for 1995, the schedule wasn't completed until almost the eve of the season. That hindered marketing and ticket sales and also resulted in some detrimental scheduling. Not only did the Mad Dogs find themselves going head-to-head with televised NFL games on a Sunday afternoon, but the CFL's failure to schedule the Calgary Stampeders and the league's most recognizable player, Doug Flutie, for a game in Memphis didn't help matters.

Despite all its mistakes, the CFL might have continued with its plunge into the U.S. market had it not been blindsided by the unexpected move of the NFL's Cleveland Browns to Baltimore. Speros, at first sought ways to co-exist in Baltimore, where he would have had to share Memorial Stadium with the invaders from Ohio. But his attempts to get 20,000 committed season-ticket holders fell far short of that mark.

He also investigated the possibility of moving the Stallions to Houston, where the Oilers are set to move out of the Astrodome and into Nashville, and he looked into Richmond and the Lehigh Valley in eastern Pennsylvania. When none of those alternatives proved fruitful, Speros opted to take his team to Montreal.

While Speros was being forced to find a new stable for his Stallions, the Barracudas and the Mad Dogs were calling it quits after just one season. In Shreveport, owners Bernie and Lonie Gieberman, who moved there after leaving Ottawa, sought to take the Pirates to Norfolk (VA), but they were given the cold shoulder by the city council and Old Dominion University, where they had hoped to play. Eventually the Giebermans gave up and put their franchise in mothballs.

That left only Anderson. And he finally called it quits at the CFL meetings in Edmonton. "When [the Stallions] made the move to leave Baltimore and Shreveport's application didn't go through in Norfolk, I knew we were shaky defense. After coming to terms with free agent defensive end Tim Cofield (Elizabeth City State), who led the league with 24 sacks, the Argos made sure he felt at home by grabbing 10 of his Memphis Mad Dog teammates in the dispersal draft. Among them were defensive end Alex Gordon (Cincinnati), linebacker/defensive back Bobby Dawson (Illinois), and defensive backs Donald Smith (Liberty) and Ed Berry (Utah State).

MIKE "PINBALL" CLEMONS

The main piece of the rebuilding puzzle fell into place in mid-March when the Argos came to terms with quarterback Doug Flutie (Boston College). The former Heisman Trophy winner's contract was assigned to Toronto after Calgary Stampeder owner Larry Ryckman's financial corporation, which operated the club, was forced into bankruptcy.

Flutie, who won an unprecedented four consecutive Most Outstanding Player awards (1991-94), the last three with Calgary, is the quarterback the Argos have not had since they allowed Matt Dunigan to escape after the '91 season. He's also the name player, the subject of sports talk shows and newspaper columns, that the franchise has lacked since Raghib (Rocket) Ismail left for the NFL Raiders in 1993 after two controversial but exciting seasons. The Argos have seen their average attendance drop from 36,000 a game to just over 17,000 since Ismail's first season in Toronto.

"Today we put the sizzle in the Argos," drooled Matthews in announcing Flutie's signing. "Imagine him and Mike Clemons in the same backfield. It doesn't take much of an imagination to see that our offense is going to be spectacular."

The diminutive Clemons (William & Mary) has been the one constant since his arrival in 1989. He again led the team in rushing and the league in all-purpose yardage. Clemons and wide receivers Paul Masotti (Acadia) and Jimmy Cunningham (Howard) provide the Argos with formidable offensive weapons.

Hamilton Tiger-Cats

The city of Hamilton will play host to the Grey Cup game for the first time since 1972, and the Tiger-Cats are hoping history done," said Anderson, who estimated that he lost $14 million in three years, including $5 million last year in San Antonio.

The Canadian teams were not without their problems. But then, the CFL without woes wouldn't be the CFL. In Calgary, owner Larry Ryckman was forced to dispossess the Stampeders after the Alberta Securities Commission found him guilty of illegal stock manipulation and ordered him to resign any position as a director or officer of a public or private company for 18 years. He was also fined $500,000, an amount that was later reduced to $250,000.

Ryckman's company was eventually forced into bankruptcy and the CFL assigned quarterback Doug Flutie's contract to the Argonauts, with whom he ultimately signed a new two-year deal that could pay him in excess of $1 million a year if he collects all his bonuses. The bankruptcy meant that Flutie, who is owed $685,000 on the $1.1 million 1995 portion of his personal services contract with Ryckman, became just another creditor who will have to wait in line to recover his money.

B.C. Lions owner Bill Comrie also called it quits after losing close to $8 million in 3 1/2 years and sold the club to a group of Vancouver businessmen, including Nelson Skalbania. CFL fans will remember Skalbania for his wild-spending ways as the owner of the Montreal Concordes.

In Ottawa, reclusive owner Horn Chen, a Chicago restaurateur and owner of several minor league hockey franchises, surfaced long enough to fire general manager Garney Henley and replace him with 68-year-old former Argo GM and coach Leo Cahill, who had been away from the game for eight years.

Cahill's return, along with that of Skalbania and the Alouettes, proves that in the CFL you can, indeed, go home again.

Toronto Argonauts

Don Matthews is in the same position heading into this season with the Argos as he was a year ago as the head coach of the Baltimore Stallions. His club is the clear preseason favorite to win the Grey Cup. With just 20 victories against 52 losses in the four seasons since their 1991 Grey Cup triumph, the Argos have dropped out of sight on the Toronto sports scene behind the Maple Leafs, Blue Jays, and Raptors. In an effort to regain at least part of that lucrative pie, the Argos went all out in the offseason to sweeten their soured image.

They wooed Matthews away from the Stallions/Alouettes to replace Bob O'Billovich as both GM and head coach. Matthews immediately hired an experienced coaching staff, including offensive coordinator Adam Rita, who as head coach took the Argos to the '91 league title.

Through the dispersal draft and key free-agent signings, Matthews has rebuilt a repeats itself. The Ticats not only played in that game 24 years ago in front of their hometown fans, but they came away with the silverware as well.

The Ticats' success in 1972 was spun by a first-year quarterback from the University of Toledo named Chuck Ealey, who went on to win Rookie of the Year honors. This season, Hamilton will have a well-seasoned quarterback leading the way. After weeks of negotiations, the Ticats finally landed Matt Dunigan (Louisiana Tech), just three weeks before the start of training camp. The had to outbid the B.C. Lions to acquire the 14-year veteran, who spent last season with the Birmingham Barracudas and was declared a free agent when that expansion team folded. Third-year quarterback Anthony Calvillo (Utah State), who shared the job last season with Steve Taylor (traded to Ottawa during the winter) will be Dunigan's backup.

"Matt's the final piece we needed for the puzzle," said head coach Don Sutherin. "Two years ago this franchise was half dead. Now we're ready to challenge for the Grey Cup."

ANTHONY CALVILLO
Hamilton Tiger-Cats

Dunigan will be pitching to familiar faces in hopes of enticing Dunigan to Hamilton: the Ticats had sweetened the bait by selecting four receivers from the Barracuda roster—Jason Phillips (Houston), who had 76 catches and 1,101 yards; Marcus Grant (Houston), 84-1,559 yards; Ted Long (Oklahoma), 65-620; and Mac Cody (Memphis)—in the dispersal draft. They plus the ageless Earl Winfield, who had 92 catches for 1,496 yards and a league-leading 13 touchdown receptions, form a formidable receiving corps.

With every intention of improving the Cats' running game, Sutherin dealt for Stampeder tailback Tony Stewart (Iowa), sending Kalin Hall (BYU) to Calgary and signing rookies Sean Patton (Youngstown State) and Joe Frazier (Auburn).

The Ticats suffered a major blow on defense when all-star middle linebacker Mike O'Shea (Guelph) signed with the Detroit Lions and cornerback Eric Carter (Knoxville) jumped to the San Francisco 49ers. Picking up linebackers Jimmy Reed from Birmingham, Joe Montford from Shreveport, and Danton Barto from Memphis in the dispersal draft should ease the loss of O'Shea, a though Sutherin will have to employ a Canadian at another position. Anthony Shelton (Tennessee State) and Kim Phillips (North Texas) will vie for Carter's spot on the corner.

Montreal Alouettes

Technically, they're the defending Grey Cup champions. But the Alouettes may no more resemble the Baltimore Stallions who last year became the first non-Canadian team to win the Grey Cup, than a horse would be mistaken for a meadowlark (alouette, in French).

The Stallions were stampeded out of Baltimore three months after winning Earl Grey's mug when Cleveland Browns owner Art Modell announced he was moving his NFL franchise to the shores of Chesapeake Bay. Stallions owner Jim Speros contemplated moving to Houston before finally opting for Montreal, which had been without a CFL franchise since 1986. And Speros wasted no time in changing the team's nickname to Alouettes.

The changes in venue and nickname, however, aren't the only alterations to the roster of the team which beat the Calgary Stampeders in last November's Grey Cup. Head coach and director of football operations Don Matthews, who was the architect of the Stallions' success, changed horses in the offseason as he joined the Toronto Argonauts in the same dual capacity. Assistants Daryl Edralin and Charlie Carpenter accompanied Matthews to Toronto. That left the head-coaching job for Bob Price, who was Matthews' defensive coordinator, while assistant director of football operations Jim Popp was promoted to GM.

Popp and Price were left with the task of filling the gaping holes left by the departure of several of their top players to the NFL. The biggest loss for both the Als and the CFL was running back Mike Pringle (Cal Fullerton), the league's Most Outstanding Player last season, who signed with the Denver Broncos. Also jumping to the NFL were defensive back Charles Anthony (San Francisco 49ers), offensive tackle Shahrar Pourdanesh (Washington Redskins), and place-kicker Carlos Huerta (Chicago Bears). Linebackers Matt Goodwin and O.J. Brigrance were also seeking NFL opportunities.

The Alouettes did manage to hang on to quarterback Tracy Ham (Georgia Southern), who found new life with the Stallions after floundering in Toronto in 1993 following six productive seasons in Edmonton. Joining him in the backfield will be Mike Saunders (Iowa) who gained 1,030 yards last year with the San Antonio Texans.

Also picked up in the dispersal draft were linebacker Greg Battle (Arizona State), a two-time winner of the CFL's outstanding defensive player award with Winnipeg who spent last season with Memphis, wide receiver Joe Kralik (Washington) and defensive back Hurlie Brown (Miami), both from San Antonio, and place-kicker Luis Zendejas from Birmingham.

Ottawa Rough Riders

The Riders pulled the surprise of the dispersal draft when they used the No. 1 overall pick to select San Antonio quarterback David Archer. While Archer may have clearly been the prize of the auction, it was felt that his $518,000 contract would be too rich for the penny-pinching Riders.

Later it was learned that general manager Garney Henley had been ordered less than 24 hours before the draft by owner Horn Chen, through his legal counsel Garth Roberts, to take Archer. Chen had apparently come to the conclusion that the presence of Archer, the league's top-ranked pivot, would be just the catalyst needed to boost sagging season-ticket sales.

After several weeks of negotiations, the Riders and Archer finally came to an agreement. By that time, however, Henley had been fired and eventually replaced by legendary Argo coach and GM Leo Cahill, who had been out of the mix for several years.

Just days after drafting Archer, the Riders further dismayed their fans by announcing that all-star defensive end John Kropke (Illinois State) had been sent to Winnipeg as the future considerations in a 1995 deal that brought offensive guard David Black and linebacker Charlie Clemons to Ottawa. Not only was the seven-year veteran one of the Riders' few legitimate stars, but he was a crowd favorite and a highly visible individual in the community with his off-field work. Several weeks earlier, the Riders had sent their top defensive back, veteran Brett Young (Oregon), to Hamilton for quarterback Steve Taylor (Nebraska), who appears destined to be Archer's backup.

The wrath of the fans, several of whom canceled their season tickets after the popular Kropke's departure, cost Henley his job a few days later.

Before his departure, Henley at least made sure Archer would have some solid receivers. He had grabbed Birmingham's Eddie Britton (Central State) and Billy Hess (West Chester) from San Antonio in the dispersal draft. He then dealt aging veteran Ray Alexander (Florida A&M) to the B.C. Lions for Robert Gordon (Nebraska-Omaha), who began his CFL career with Ottawa in 1991. They'll team with last year's leading Rider receiver, Odessa Turner (Northwestern Louisiana), the former NFLer, who caught 70 passes for 1,054 yards.

Mike Richardson (Louisiana Tech), the CFL's leading rusher in 1992 and '93 and the Rookie of the Year in '92, gained 555 yards last year and provides the Riders with a solid running game.

WESTERN DIVISION

Calgary Stampeders

The Larry Ryckman-Doug Flutie era is over. The wild, magical ride through wonderland came to an abrupt halt in the offseason when Ryckman Financial, which operated the team, was forced into bankruptcy and the club, which he bought prior to the 1992 season, was sold off to local businessman Sig Gutsche.

But even before he was found guilty of illegal stock manipulations by the Alberta Securities Commission, there were strong indications that Ryckman could no longer afford Flutie's $1.1 million (Canadian) annual salary and that the league's marquee player would be peddled elsewhere. That eventually came to fruition when Flutie's contract was assigned to the Argonauts after a deal was worked out between the player and the Toronto club.

The task of rebuilding the team's reputation in the Calgary business community where many creditors were left holding the proverbial bag when Ryckman went bankrupt, goes to the new owners.

On the field, however, the job of keeping the Stampeders on the winning track now falls, to a large extent, on third-year quarterback Jeff Garcia (San Jose State). Mind you, the 26-year-old pivot with the flaming red hair and Huckleberry Finn looks, showed last season that he didn't find Flutie's shoes too large to fill at all. When Flutie went down in midseason with an elbow injury which forced him to undergo surgery, Garcia led the Stampeders to an 8-1 record. Flutie came back for the playoffs, but when he was unable to generate his usual offensive magic in the Grey Cup game against the Baltimore Stallions, many felt coach Wally Buono should have switched to Garcia in the second half.

The loss to the Stallions marked the third time in Flutie's four seasons in Calgary that the Stamps failed to grab the championship ring despite having the league's best record during the regular season. The expectations may not be as high with Garcia at the helm. But that's not to say the Stamps won't be one of the favorites to represent the West in this year's championship game in Hamilton. Garcia will be surrounded by much of the same talent that lost just three of 18 games last season.

Leading the way is Canadian slotback Dave Sapunjis (Western Ontario), who topped the league in receiving yardage for the second time in three seasons with 111 catches for 1,666 yards and 12 TDs. Then there's Allen Pitts (Cal Fullerton), who had 100 receptions for 1,492 yards, and Terry Vaughn (Arizona), who had 72 catches for 1,031 yards in his rookie season. Also added via the dispersal draft were receivers Schrednick Austin (Clark-Atlanta) from Birmingham and David Lucas (Florida A&M) of San Antonio.

Defensively, the Stamps picked up 12-year veteran tackle Rodney Harding (Oklahoma State) from Memphis to go along with all-star ends Will Johnson (Northeast Louisiana) and Marvin Pope (Ohio Central) and linebacker Anthony McClanahan (Washington State), an impressive midseason addition last fall.

British Columbia Lions

Just two years ago, the Lions were the surprise Grey Cup champions. After failing to defend that title last fall, they are starting all over again this summer with new ownership, a new GM, and a new head coach.

Losing some $8 million in 3 1/2 years, long-distance owner Bill Comrie decided he'd had enough and returned to selling furniture from his Edmonton headquarters. He sold the franchise in March to a group of 10 Vancouver-area businessmen, including Nelson Skalbania, the one-time owner of the short-lived Montreal Concordes. The price: $100,000 down and a $2.6 million balance.

General manager Eric Tillman apparently saw the writing on the wall last fall. He resigned to return to the U.S. as director of football operations for the NFL-financed WLAF. In February, shortly before unloading the club, Comrie fired head coach Dave Ritchie and replaced him with former Lions quarterback Joe Paopao, who had spent the past two seasons as the offensive coordinator of the Edmonton Eskimos.

The popular Paopao, however, has his work cut out for himself this season. The

DAVE SAPUNJIS
Calgary Stampeders

Lions lost out in their attempt to acquire veteran Matt Dunigan, who signed with Hamilton rather than return to the Lions, for whom he played in 1988-89. Having unceremoniously dumped last year's starter, Danny McManus (Florida State), in anticipation of landing Dunigan, the Lions were left with Canadian Julio Caravatta (Simon Fraser) as their most experienced quarterback. The Lions had signed rookie Mark Williams (Kansas) and were expected to pursue the much-traveled Damon Allen (Cal Fullerton), who found himself out of work when the expansion Memphis Mad Dogs folded.

Paopao also faced losing slotback Darren Flutie, who had played out his option, but he brought back veteran Ray Alexander (Florida A&M), who had jumped to Ottawa last season, in a trade for Robert Clark (North Carolina Central). Mike Trevathan (Montana), who had 56 catches for 998 yards, Matt Clark (Montana) and newcomer Clarence Verdin, a two-time Pro Bowler with the Indianapolis Colts, are a solid receiving corps. Verdin should provide excitement on kick returns. Cory Philpot (Mississippi), second in rushing with 1,308 yards, and Sean Milington (Simon Fraser) give the Lions as good a running game as there is in the league.

Defensively, the loss of tackle Andrew Stewart (Cincinnati) to Toronto and backs Charles Gordon (Eastern Michigan) and Kelly Sims (Cincinnati) to the NFL will hurt. But in rush end Daved Benefield (Cal Northridge) and linebackers Tyrone Chalmers (Arkansas), Henry Newby (Fairmont State), and Shelton Quarles (Vanderbilt) the Lions have the basis for a solid unit.

Edmonton Eskimos

It was mid March and defensive coordinator Rich Stabler had just resigned to take a similar position with the University of Oregon. "We've got the smallest staff meetings in the league," joked head coach Ron Lancaster, who still had not replaced offensive coordinator Joe Paopao, the new head coach of the B.C. Lions.

The Eskimos finished second in the North Division (13-5) after many observers predicted they might not make the playoffs. Much of the success came from a tough defense which allowed a league-low 359 points. Linebacker Willie Pless (Kansas) led the CFL with 101 tackles and was named its outstanding defensive player for the third time. He had able support from the likes of Bennie Goods (Alcorn State), Leroy Bugh (Bishop's), and Mavin Hunter (Wisconsin), along with newcomers Darian Hagan (Colorado) and Singor Mobley (Washington State). The addition of cornerback Grady Cavness (Texas) and Maurice Miller (Wake Forest), who were picked off the San Antonio roster in the dispersal draft, should further strengthen the unit.

Offensively, the Eskimos came out of nowhere to grab free agent quarterback Danny McManus (Florida State), who had been released by the B.C. Lions. Kerwin Bell (Florida), who came on in the second half of the season, was released. The Eskimos were competing with Winnipeg for the services of Kent Austin, who lost his job in Toronto to Doug Flutie. They were also interested in reacquiring Damon Allen, who became a free agent when Memphis folded. There is also third-year man Chris Vargas (Nevada), who has been compared to a young Matt Dunigan.

At least there is a sure-handed receiver in 5-foot-6 Shalon Baker (Montana), who grabbed 79 passes for 1,156 yards and walked off with the Rookie of the Year award. Canadian Nick Mazzoli (Simon Fraser) had struggled in Hamilton and Ottawa but finally blossomed in Edmonton, gaining 1,044 yards on 67 catches. Another huge find was running back Eric Blount (North Carolina), who took over in midseason and still rushed for 677 yards and a league-best 6.9 yard average.

Saskatchewan Roughriders

The western Riders came away from the dispersal draft with two of the league's elite wide receivers in Curtis Mayfield (Oklahoma State) and Rod Harris (Texas A&M), both off the Shreveport roster. They join 10-year pro Donald Narcisse (Texas Southern) and Canadian Ray Elgaard (Utah), the league's all-time receiving leader, in a superb unit. Now all GM Alan Ford and new coach Jim Daley have to do is find someone or some way of getting the ball to them. Warren Jones (Hawaii) and Tom Burgess (Colgate) struggled last season. While Ford expressed some interest in free agents Damon Allen and Matt Dunigan, he admitted that finances would not permit him to get into a bid for a high-priced passer. One solution could be free agent Danny Barrett (Cincinnati), who missed most of last year with a knee injury in Ottawa.

Situated in the CFL's smallest market, the Riders have annually struggled with their finances. Staging last year's highly successful Grey Cup game earned the club $15 million and dropped its deficit to a workable $1 million. That splash of red ink could be further reduced with an improved performance over a 6-12 mark that left the Riders out of the playoffs.

"We need more explosion from our offense," said Ford. "We hope that with the addition of Mayfield and Harris we can go with three import receivers."

Harris missed all but six games in '95 with a serious ankle injury that limited him to eight catches after two 1,000-yard seasons with Sacramento. But Ford is confident last year was "just a glitch" in Harris's career. Mayfield also dropped from a 1,202-yard effort in '94 to 846 yards a year ago, but that could be attributed to Shreveport's reliance on the running game. He was still the Pirates' leading receiver.

Defensively the acquisition of Mark Ledbetter (Washington State) from Birmingham strengthens a front seven that already boasts Bobby Jurasin (Northern Michigan) and linebacker Ron Goetz (Minnesota).

Winnipeg Blue Bombers

The '94 Bombers set a dubious club record for most points given up in a season (572). Then last year's defense allowed a whopping 653 points. General manager and head coach Cal Murphy has set out to restore the team's long-standing reputation for tough defensive football.

Murphy's rebuilding started with the acquisition of free-agent linebacker Tommie Smith (Washington), who spent the past two years with San Antonio/Sacramento. He'll team with holdover Greg Clark (Arizona State) at inside linebacker in the Bombers' 3-4 scheme.

With his first pick in the dispersal draft, Murphy grabbed Birmingham outside linebacker Angelo Snipes (West Georgia), who recorded 17 sacks last season, third-best in the league. Murphy then selected cornerback Damon Lyons (UCLA) from Memphis and halfback Bobby Evans (Southern Arkansas) from Shreveport.

The Bombers were handed a gift when Ottawa sent them veteran all-star defensive end John Kropke (Illinois State) as final payment on a trade last season that sent offensive guard David Black and linebacker Charlie Clemons (Georgia) to the eastern Riders. The re-signing of end Kenny Walker

GERALD WILSON
Winnipeg Blue Bombers

(Nebraska) further enhanced the unit.

On offense the Bombers lost running back Blaise Bryant, who opted for an NFL tryout, but found a more than adequate replacement in ex-Shreveport Pirate Martin Patton (Texas A&I), the CFL's fourth-leading rusher, with 1,040 yards. The Bombers bolstered their receiving corps with San Antonio's Mark Stock (VMI), the former Washington Redskin, and Freeman Baysinger (Humboldt State) from Shreveport, who led the league in kickoff returns. They'll join Canadian slotback Gerald Wilcox (Weber State), whose 69 catches for 1,024 yards led the team for the third consecutive year.

With their final pick of the draft, the Bombers went for Shreveport quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver (Texas Tech), the former Houston Oilers, Atlanta Falcons, and San Diego Charger. Tolliver completed 59 percent of his passes in his first CFL season and could press Reggie Slack (Auburn) for the starting job. Another possibility is Kent Austin (Mississippi), who became expendable in Toronto when the Argos acquired Doug Flutie.

A familiar face will be missing from the Bombers' offensive line. Tackle Mies Correll (Ottawa), a 19-year CFL veteran, the last four with Winnipeg, wasn't re-signed and joined the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. □

STATMAN-PLUS, Inc. Presents: The 1996 FANTASY FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIPS

Over $2,000 in Prizes for Each 30-Team League

HERE ARE THE BASIC RULES (with some new changes for 1996).

1 Use a $50 million salary cap FOR ALL 27 PLAYERS (using our listed salaries & positions).

Any non-listed player can be drafted for $10 million. Call for position eligibility.

2 Each team consists of 27 players (18 Active Players & 9 Reserve Players)

3 New For 1996: FREE AGENTS (up to 5 per team during the season)

The ONLY available free agents are those players listed in our ad at $0.8 million

To sign a free agent, you must release one of your players at the same position

Once a player is released, you cannot reactivate him (even if he is one of the players listed in the free agent pool).

4 You will be randomly placed in a league consisting of 30 teams.

5 Each league competes in the following 11 categories using the position requirements shown below

1) Rushing Yds 2) Yds/Run 3) Receiving Yards 4) Yds/Reception 5) FG's Kicked 6) Extra-Points Kicked

7) Passing Yds 8) Rushing TD's 9) Receiving TD's 10) Passing TD's 11) Passing TD's minus Interceptions

NOTE: All players can contribute to each statistical category. i.e. RB's can catch & throw passes, etc.

ACTIVE ROSTER: 4 Quarterbacks, 4 Running Backs, 4 Receivers, 2 Tight Ends & 4 Kickers

RESERVE ROSTER: 2 Quarterbacks, 2 Running Backs, 2 Receivers, 1 Tight End & 2 Kickers

SCORING:

League standings are based on cumulative stats for your active roster players. Reserve players don't count until activated. For each category teams are ranked from 30 pts (best) to 1 pt (worst). Points are added up & standings are updated weekly. League prizes are awarded after the regular season.

WEEKLY UPDATES:

Updates are faxed, mailed or E-mailed (same price) starting after week 2. Each update includes: 1) League standings, 2) Your recent roster moves, 3) Detailed stats for your team (active roster, full season & last week's stats), 4) Active roster stats for all teams 30 in your league (mail & E-mail only).

ROSTER MOVES:

You can make weekly roster moves between your active & reserve roster (if paid for in advance) as follows:

Phone: 1-800-STATS-67 Fax: 1-908-634-3045 E-mail: statman@njersey.com

Roster moves must be received by Saturday at 8:00 PM Eastern Time to go into effect for Sunday & Monday games. Roster moves involving players in Thursday or Saturday games MUST be received before the start of the game. A player can only be included in ONE roster move per week, so you can't activate a player for Thursday & then reserve him for Sunday (or vice versa). Stats count from Tuesday thru Monday. Pre-season moves (between active & reserve roster) are allowed for processed entries. Once the season begins, the 1st weekly roster moves take effect Sept 15th.

FREE AGENTS:

Each team will be able to purchase up to 5 free agents during the season (from a limited list of players). The ONLY available free agents are those players listed in our ad at $0.8 million.
